It's Almost Winter

Ashley C. Jerman
sleep or love like it
frames our faces in arms between our good bodies and the leaves
spin my hair
into yellow mittens //

winter isn’t hard with you here and I will split the wood in your grandfather’s sweater // in leaves that won’t fall so we’ll pick them // give them to the ground // warm the dirt before the cold comes in blue fingers we’ll build a fire to keep the sunlight

beaming at you
across the room
when the window is open we’re too big to carry it // the open breeze
that ripened our stale bodies is still with us now // lifting my curtains onto my bed

we breathe like trains:

into maps and exhale
stories of how we arrived with flowers
woven into iron rails
behind us
the rails merge
any desert moving
with one diner
ten cars each
and a phone booth
is where I call from
to give myself away
when you need it
telephones don’t ring // on the road

is like your head
and blankets like your stories are true and lies sometimes
like mine

when our faces are safe in our arms //
I am at my station //
I do not have walls
to keep us inside
