2013

Barrettes

Colin Uriah-Johnson

Follow this and additional works at: http://scholarworks.umt.edu/oval

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://scholarworks.umt.edu/oval/vol6/iss2/4

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by ScholarWorks at University of Montana. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Oval by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at University of Montana. For more information, please contact scholarworks@mail.lib.umt.edu.
Barrettes

Until everything becomes less of the it it was intended for to explain this I cannot begin why in my head your hairpins read as barrettes once their pressure releases your scalp from the demand of your hair snap-less I discover these in my library rows of bed-sheets and where your hair should be their volumes fill the glass at my bedside to iterate the recurrent night you spend until the morning-rush forgets you out the door down the steps, hair undone up the street, powerless their arrival I document in your departing the barrette’s sole constant and there is a friday I am sure you lament the absent hairpin to justify your bangs left before going out just as I am sure there is a morning I lament from no clean glass to drink the drought of hairpins I collect not for their body but the absence they frame a verb I correct as thirst for your barrettes every visit you discontinue a small bronze pin to punctuate its failing grip into a glass that is increasingly less of one if only there were a buckle here to trap the instant