An associate justice of the U. S. Supreme Court and the president of the American Bar Association are among the dignitaries of bench and bar who will take part in ceremonies dedicating the new law building at Montana State University on Sept. 6, Dean Robert E. Sullivan announced.

Associate Justice William O. Douglas will speak at afternoon dedication exercises on Wednesday, Sept. 6, and John C. Satterfield of Yazoo City, Miss., incoming president of the ABA, will be the evening banquet speaker, according to present plans.

Other prominent figures on the national and local legal scene will participate in the dedication events, which will probably span two or three days, the dean said.

"The dedication of the new building will not only launch the observance of the 50th anniversary of the MSU Law School but will also be an occasion to pay tribute to the accomplishments and the tradition of the legal profession in Montana," Dean Sullivan commented.
