First Time

Lowell Jaeger
The soles of my bare feet scuffed tough enough to pad over gravel of this old logging road, farther than my new permit and the car I stole from my father will drive. I'd be lucky if she were even fourteen.
With one pink digit she's hooked me by the belt loop
and tags along,
complaining without her shoes.

No, she's pushing me.
I'm only a whisper in the pine boughs, and the breath of her flesh sways me, wafts me on.

We don't talk. Neither of us can find what we're looking for under her t-shirt, beyond my unzippered surrender and the slow clock of sunlight beating us down.
Nothing lasts
in the flash of that day more than a painful rise inside her rib cage, her shoulders, the deep bloodless welt where she'd wormed herself against a gooseberry, the imprint of thorn and needles tattooed on my thigh.
