A Gathering of Cardiovascular Surgeons

Matt Yurdana
Dr. Veer, the keynote speaker, opens with a joke about the Swiss cheese fondue, two types of cholesterol, "good" and "delicious," and he winks along the banquet, his colleagues sipping their aperitifs.

How lovely it was to be eager and serious, he says, that first open-heart practicum:

an Irish setter,
his limp paws and his thin damp coat, his rib cage sawed open, arteries clamped with small gleaming forceps.

One cannot forget that first time groping inside another body.

Everything so close and almost hot, and your fingers slip under the left ventricle, cradling it,

believing in that muscle's steady hitch and wobble, as if startled by the touch.
By sunset, they have toasted that tragic, magnificent dog for hours.

Some lean into the breeze on the glass verandah, others wade
in the fountain below the stone boy, pouring endlessly
from his fluted urn.

When the music begins, the timbales and congas and horns,

Dr. Dubois in a strapless cocktail gown, mambos in tight circles, coaxing her lanky husband.

Dr. Wheeler pulls off his shoes, suspenders dangling at his hips.

And Dr. Veer is famous for his rumba.
He weaves his partner, a first-year intern, among the ferns and palmettos and the courtyard clears.

She is blushing, her dress whisking from her thighs with the lazy swish of maracas.

Her feet chase his quick, sweeping half-steps.

A few moments, and she finds the pattern, swinging and pulling from his arms, tight as a shadow or mirror.
She feels the whispers and nods, his right hand hovering near the small of her back.