MISSOULA--

Two University of Montana students working on their predoctoral degrees have been awarded fellowships by the National Institute of General Medical Sciences, according to Fred S. Honkala, dean of the Graduate School.

J. Latham Claflin, in his intermediate year of the predoctoral program, received a $5,100 fellowship. He was sponsored by Dr. Carl Larson, director of the Stella Duncan Laboratory at UM. Mr. Claflin is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Claflin, Sr. of Lake Oswego, Oregon.

David Earl Murrish, in his terminal year of the predoctoral program, received a $5,300 fellowship. He was sponsored by Dr. James Templeton of the Zoology department. Mr. Murrish is from Alhambra, California.
