AMERICAN IDOL

I bought an electric toothbrush because the dentist said I wasn't thorough enough & wants to see me in two months.
The therapist prophesied a near-recovery, predicted love would come eventually.
When the conductor asked for my ticket, the reality was he'd been working for ten hours straight & could use a smoke break, but I had nothing to offer.

Now at night, I brush & brush to the whir of the small machine, screen my calls, put lettuce on tomorrow's sandwich.
I imagine I'm being interviewed on a leather couch on a talk-show set & when I tell a story about middle school haircuts, everyone laughs. Outside, two teenagers argue over video game graphics. On TV, the finalists are forced to sing for their lives.
