Vanetta Lewis, associate professor of Home Economics at the University of Montana, attended a consumer credit workshop in Madison, Wisconsin Oct. 9-12.

Sponsored by the American Home Economics Association Foundation, the workshop, "Consumer Credit in Family Financial Management" was focused on the family use of credit from the problems of credit application to preparing for the predicted "cashless society" of the near future.

The purpose of the workshop, according to Helen Mandigo, president of AHEA, is "to equip leaders in the profession with information on trends and problems in consumer credit, which will enable them, in turn, to organize state and regional workshops for home economists working at the community level with credit users."
