MISSOULA---

Classes directed by seven University of Montana faculty members will highlight educational activities during the 23rd annual School for Administrative Leadership in January and February on the UM campus in Missoula.

Two sessions will be held as part of the 1968 educational program. The first will be Jan. 2-26, the second will be Jan. 29-Feb. 23.

Employes from state and federal agencies as well as those from other public and private organizations will attend.

Several fields of specialization will be covered at the school, including public and human relations, effective writing, economics, political interest groups and public policy, and community relations.

UM faculty members who will speak during the school sessions include Edward B. Dugan, journalism professor; Dr. Gordon Browder, sociology professor; Dr. Richard E. Shannon, economics professor; Larry Barsness, English instructor; Dr. Arnold W. Bolle, dean of forestry; Dr. Harold Tascher, social welfare professor, and Dr. Thomas Payne, political science professor.

Thirty students will be accepted for each of the two sessions. Hundreds of persons have been graduated from previous administrative leadership schools held on the Missoula campus. Alumni are from many states, including Alaska, Ohio, Washington and Tennessee.

The leadership school is held through the University Extension Division at the UM and is under the direction of Thomas J. Collins, director of public services.
