PROGRAM NOTE

Oscar Fingel O'Flahertie Wills Wilde, better known as Oscar Wilde, was born in Dublin, October 16, 1854, and died, it is thought, in 1900. His personality has become a legend; his plays are but one side of his kaleidoscopic genius.

"To Wilde," writes Archibald Henderson, "creation in art consisted in the celebration of a mental holiday. In the guise of interpreter of the modern spirit he was always happening upon the discovery of a great, a unique truth; and this he flippantly and condescendingly condescended to communicate to that boorish monster, the public." In an inverted way, Wilde aimed to teach the world the importance of being frivolous. That is why The Importance of Being Earnest (1895) is a serious and epochal contribution to English drama.

Mr. Henderson further says. "'The Importance of Being Earnest' is Wilde's nearest approach to a unique genre . . . the truth is that it is an epigrammatic extravaganza, cast in the form of farce. . . . This play is actually social satire on the fantastic plane."

The present play was first produced at the St. James Theater, London. This is its first performance by the Masquers Club.
