SOS From the Night

It was late—almost 1 o'clock. The night was dark and cold and a feeling of eeriness crept cautiously around the corner. Outside lurked a figure, hat pulled low over his left eye. He made a dive for the nearest sorority house, opened the door and meandered upstairs, casually and nonchalantly. In his present state he wasn't too sure of the room which he tried to enter. Luckily housemothers lock their rooms.

The football hero's sweetheart was passing down the hall. Catching a glimpse of the slinking, slithering figure, she emitted a bloodcurdling scream and slunk fearfully under the nearest table, crying, "Popo, Popo, save me, save me!"

One-Man Strike

Who said anything about the university students who were scared to put on a sit-down strike? One courageous youth had one all by himself, for his friend's benefit. He just sat and sat. And the next morning he awoke, still sitting—on the front steps—waiting. Crip always was known for his tenacious and stubborn qualities. Mules are too.
