DEDICATION:

Today Mein Kampus views another 98% plebiscite. Heil, heil, the gangs all here working quietly, secretly, and slyly. We bow our knee and dedicate our book to the organization—(dictatorship within the faculty is not of what we speak.)

—tne—

HEIL PANTZER!

I faithfully promise (if I am elected) to suppress all attempts to get supervised vote counting on the campus and to get every Forester a date at least once a year (even if it kills me). For every vote I get (regardless of the means) I resolve to give the supporter one keg of beer if he will give half of it back for the privilege of voting.

My Motto: A Sigma Nu in every office and the devil take the Phi Deltas.

I have been groomed since a Freshman, I can't lose! Heil Pantzer.

This unfortunate victim of a purge is seen during the trial preliminary to being sent to a concentration camp. His diary, which was found after his disappearance, describes the horrors of life in the camp at 1110 Gerald, and the pitiful condition of the other prisoners. The diary ends abruptly, and no trace of the writer has ever been found.

The account tells of the miserable food and clothing given to the men, and of the nauseating odors arising from the lack of sanitation. Prisoners gradually decline into a sort of stupor and wander vaguely about the camp.

At another nearby camp, 1006 Gerald, more dangerous political offenders are confined. Living conditions are equally horrible, this camp being notorious for the insect life that infests it.

Prisoners here, instead of becoming comatose, develop delusions of grandeur. With great seriousness they fancy themselves as candidates for important offices, and barter votes among themselves.

"The Camp of Lost Souls" is the name prisoners in other camps have for the one at 340 University. The complete silence that surrounds any activities there gives rise to unsavory rumors that have never been confirmed or denied, as no one has ever been known to escape.

The hard work that prisoners at 500 University are forced to do makes it one of the most dreaded of camps. Victims of the GPU count themselves lucky if they escape being sent here. Snarling and dissension among those at the camp gives much trouble to the police in charge. In addition it is next to a camp of spies. Prisoners know that every move they make is being watched.

Separate camps are maintained for women. Into them are forced the howling, protesting females who run afoul of the policewomen's patrol. These determined supporters of the dictatorship go about the city streets and snatch any unwary girl who happens to be alone and unprotected.

The camps are locked and the windows barred. Prisoners are allowed to walk about for a short time each day under supervision, and the rest of the time they spend at the windows, gazing longingly out.

Two large camps for children are located in the north and south sections of the country. These children come from the rural districts. The program of the camps is on the whole very beneficial to the children, as it serves to make them into useful members of society.

The ones in the south camp are the most needy of this training. After being disinfected and serviced to remove squeaks and rattles, they are shown how to eat with forks. A Herr Williams explains the use of the napkin and other fine points to newcomers.

At the northern camp the program starts with the removal of hay from the ears and hair of the kids. This is quite a job, as the greatest number come in just after haying season. Their long underwear is cut off, and they are trained to sleep until 7 o'clock in the morning.

After a year in the camp they are allowed to go out alone, and so good is the training that they seldom get lost or come to harm.

Excerpt from 1930 edition of the Campus Rakings.

Quite a dramatic little scene took place not long ago when Marjorie Reynolds fainted in the Treasure room at the Library. Professor P. C. Phillips, always gallant, heroically struggled down the steep steps with her in his arms. But, what we would like to know, is—Why did she faint??!

"Q'aves vous dit, Jean" Campbell of sports column fame may know his football rules, but he went afoul of an Interfraternity regulation and sent the light-of-love a corsage. Stortzmen, having had to give some of their picnic money to Student-Faculty council, levied a $50 fine on the ardent young man, and threaten to cool him off with a purge.

We, the common herd—the simple student class—are the Czecho-Slovakias . . . Butted back and forth, mercilessly torn asunder by the haves and the has beens. Innocently both factions hang their heads and pointing the finger of suspicion at each other, say, "Tsk, tsk, the situation has only now been brought to our attention. How perfectly awful. We had no idea. My word, my word!"

There was a rumor drifting about concerning Marne Love and the Grizzly Queen situation but it's quieted down now. They said, though, that Marne was heard to murmur slyly to Johnnie Dolan, "How much do I owe you?" and they even said she slipped him a ten-spot. Holy Swastika, aint things corrupt?

The G. P. U. is going to investigate the mentality of Bill "Humpy" Krueger. It seems he can't take a hint. Every time he goes down to the Theta house to see "Sudsy" Jones she plays "I Get Along Without You Very Well." But Humpy keeps coming back for more. The concentration camp is the next apparent step. Perhaps if he concentrates enough in the right way he can almost get Sudsy to believing that he is the one and only.

As far as Glamour Pants Stevens goes, every house gets stuck with one. While at Stephens College Chichester's pin looked pretty good, since there's a scarcity of men in those parts. Right after the Phi Delt house party, though, the masquerade was over.

Came the fall and after having met with a number of unsuccessful attempts (notably with Hank Preston and Denise Deschamps), Walt "Goldie the Cheerleader" Millar finally got rid of the sword and shield.

But after all, the stereotype Joe College does get monotonous eventually. Maxine is back in the running again—greener pastures and variety and etc.
