LIKE MOTHER, LIKE SON—Mrs. V. Lucille Bulman and her son, Donald K. Bulman, will both receive degrees at the summer graduation ceremonies. Mrs. Bulman is graduating in sociology and anthropology and Donald is graduating in education. Both are graduates of Havre high school. Mrs. Bulman has been teaching school in the Havre area for almost 25 years, and Donald plans to teach science in a Montana high school.

'52 Writers' Conference Ends On Notes of Confidence

BY BILL GALVIN

The 1952 Writers' conference ended Friday morning when four of the participating members held the last panel discussion and concluded that the conference had been a success.

Henry Larom, director of the conference, felt that although most of the writers had disagreed with each other on several points they were, after all, working toward the same goal. Mr. Larom didn't exactly say what that goal was, but one could conclude that it was a better understanding of mankind through the efforts of the writer in America.

David Davidson, who is the author of several novels, thought that the future of the writer in America is taking place right now in such conferences. When he thought of first coming out here to culturally barren Montana, he admitted that he was not sure of what he would find. However, he has been rewarded, as has Montana, by finding that all of the writers seem to know where they are going and what they want to write about. He said he has found at least three writers who have already "arrived." He has also found one novelist who after two chapters has definite promise.

Mr. Larom wished to follow up these writers who have been encouraged at the conference. He asked that all the writers who have found hope and encouragement give their names to the English department so that the encouragement will not stop.

Leslie Fiedler, who is on a Fulbright scholarship to teach in Italy, also asked himself why he

Homecoming Set For Oct. 4; Includes Reunions

Two class reunions are set for the 1952 MSU Homecoming Oct. 4.

Members of the classes of 1902 and 1927 are completing plans now for 50-year and 25-year celebrations, respectively, as part of the 1952 Homecoming program, according to A. C. Cogswell, alumni association director.

Guy Sheridan, Missoula, is chairman of the reunion for the class of 1902, and Mrs. Heloise Vinal Wickes, Missoula, is in charge of the reunion for the class of 1927.

Ted Delaney '47 of Missoula is chairman for the 1952 celebration. The football game with Brigham Young university the afternoon of Oct. 4 will mark the University's entrance into regular Skyline Eight conference competition.

Plans Set For Degree Exercises

All candidates for degrees in the summer commencement should report to A. C. Cogswell behind Main hall not later than 7:20 p.m. Aug. 21, to be lined up for the graduation march to the Student Union auditorium. In case of rain, they should meet at that time in the Student Union Gold room.

Approximately 130 candidates for degrees will take part in the summer commencement exercises, which will start at 8 p.m., Aug. 21, in the Student Union auditorium. There are 68 applicants for bachelor of arts degrees and 62 applicants for master's degrees.

A special feature of the commencement program will be the granting of honorary master of arts degrees to Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Bovey of Great Falls for their contributions in the pres-

Chumrau Urges Seniors, Teachers To Use Bureau

Graduating seniors and teachers may still register and use the services of the placement bureau, according to Paul Chumrau, director of the bureau.

Teachers attending summer session are eligible to register upon completion of one session. The bureau is still receiving calls for music teachers, home economics teachers, and English teachers, but in this last category they must be women.

Most of the June graduates have been placed, Mr. Chumrau said, but anyone looking for jobs are welcome to come over and check the unfilled positions. Calls are still coming in for teachers and administrators. Administrative work requires an M.A., and several calls have been received.

Kay Reardon in the job placement, said that many seniors have not registered and that it would be wise to get their letters of reference before they leave school. Many students write back for letters of reference after they are gone and sometimes forgotten. It would be wise, she said, to register with the placement bureau before they leave and when references or information are needed it is readily available.

Another Bound Volume

With this issue the Sun finished another summer of covering campus activities, and shortly another bound volume will be added to those that record the pattern of MSU's summer sessions. Within those volumes is Montana's reply to the magazine that once called the University a "cultural airpocket in the Rockies." Sooner would the University remember the praise given recently by Donald Adams of the New York Times, the network's choice of MSU voices for its coast-to-coast programs, and John Gunther's reference to Montana's "justly famous School of Journalism."

And within those volumes are preserved the names of the graduates who sought and seek to make this country the better for having better-educated young people. It takes more than a little "doing" to turn down offers of good summer jobs or a well-earned rest to return to the campus for advanced degrees and refresher programs.

While without students a school is nothing, between those covers, too, are frequent quotes from the profs who directed and shared the teaching. There are "according to" stories from Ernie Atkinson, Linus Carleton, Bill Maucker, and "Shally." It's not child's play exactly to put on a show with such a big cast.

Don't bust a gusset getting over to the Sun office to browse through the files—but they're proud evidences of what MSU annually offers.

Bue to Give TV Report At Convention

Prof. O. J. Bue of the journalism school will speak at the 67th annual convention of the Montana State Press association in Sidney this week end, according to secretary-manager W. L. Alcorn. Other journalism staff members who will accompany Bue and Alcorn are Prof. E. B. Dugan and Dean J. L. C. Ford.

Professor Bue will give a talk entitled "Television as a Competitor" which will be based on observations he made while covering the national political conventions for the National Broadcasting company in Chicago last month. While at Chicago, Bue also attended a two-week radio-television seminar at Northwestern university.

"Television demonstrated that it could get the story—first at Abilene, later at Chicago, and it did a man-sized job of battering down the doors to the smoke-filled rooms," Professor Bue said.

"In Chicago especially television demonstrated that it could tell the story, with an utter contempt for cost and an immeasurable amount of equipment," Bue said. The three major networks spent in excess of $12 million in two weeks of coverage of the conventions.

Other speakers scheduled to appear on the convention program include Dean Ford, who will give a report from the journalism school; Larry Bowler of the Daniels County Leader, who will tell, "What You Can do With a Polaroid Camera"; and Thomas E. Dobbs of the Sonohomish (Wash.) Tribune, who will talk on "Shop Economics."

University Students To Entertain Boy's State

Montana State University will be represented at Boy's State in Dillon Aug. 19.

The University School of Music will send several students to Western Montana College of Education to entertain the several hundred high school boys there for the annual meeting. Karen Whittet, Livingston, Miss Montana of 1952, will also appear on the program with the music school students.

Historical Pageant Set for Deer Lodge

"Gold Is Where You Find It," an historical pageant of the early gold-rush days of Montana, is scheduled for production in Deer Lodge, Aug. 20-23.

The pageant, under the direction of MSU Prof. Bert Hansen, is to be staged as part of the Deer Lodge centennial celebration.

Madame Curie was the first woman appointed to the French Cabinet.

Malouf and Students Spend Summer In Study of Old Indian Village

BY TED HEWETT

Finding remains of an Indian village occupied between 1870 and 1885 and an 86-year-old Indian who once lived there offered a lot of practical experience to the students who accompanied Prof. Carling Malouf of the sociology and anthropology department on his archeology survey class this summer.

The group, headed by Malouf, consisted of four University students, John Garrett, an anthropology student from Tulane university and Malouf's field supervisor; plus two hired laborers. They finished their work last week.

Leaving here the first of July, the group spent most of their time at the Indian village they worked on. The Hidatsa Indians there, locally known as Gros Ventre, named the village after their chief, Crow Flies High.

Settlement of 100

Malouf said the village, at the time it was occupied, was composed of 20 cabins and one earthlodge, which was used as a dance hall. About 100 people lived there.

As it was located outside the reservation, the Indians received no rations or federal aid from the government.

As a result, they were largely dependent on the land they cultivated, especially after the buffalo disappeared from the range. Since the time the village was deserted, about 1885, the land where it once stood has been plowed about 50 times, Malouf said, making it very hard to find outlines in the terrain showing where the various cabins had been.

Malouf's group was fortunate, however, in finding an Indian who had lived in the village who remembered not only where all the cabins had stood, but pointed out where the earthlodge had been, and remembered the names of almost all the Indians who had lived there. In addition to their names, the old Indian related them together by their clans.

Bear in the Water

The Indian, whose Indian name is Bear in the Water, has used his English name, Adlai Stevenson, since taking it in 1893 in honor of the then vice-president of the U. S. Although he is now 86 years old, he supplied Malouf's group with much information about the village that would have otherwise never been obtainable, and drew a map of the village and a drawing of the earthlodge as it looked when occupied.

Stevenson is an old Indian scout, having enlisted at Fort Buford, N. D. at the time Sitting Bull was still threatening. He later was made a mail carrier with a route from Buford to Miles City. Malouf said the old Indian made their study more enjoyable by spending a lot of time in the group's camp, telling stories to the students.

Of the 20 cabins that once made up the village, the group found remains of eight, and dug around a couple of them finding about 400 specimens of old tin cans, files, saws, dishes, bottles, and so forth, all dating back to the 1870's and '80s.

The group also found two cache pits about nine feet underground, in which the Indians stored corn and meat. At the bottom of each they found the remains of a buffalo calf.

The four students in Malouf's archeology survey class were DeVona LeMieux, Stanley, N. D.; Roy Shipley, Livingston; Richard Cannon, Butte; and Margaret Wetzsteon, Sula. They each received seven credits for their work this summer.

Under Park Service

The survey was made under a $3,000 contract with the National Park service, Malouf said, which is given for archeological studies in areas that will be flooded out by the construction of a new dam. The area they studied will be flooded in a few years when the Garrison dam, now under construction, is finished.

The dam will be one of the largest rolled earth-filled dams in the world, and will back up water on the Missouri for about 200 miles, almost extending into Montana. It is located about 30 miles south of Minot, N. D.

The village studied by Malouf's group is located near Sanish, N. D., about 100 miles upstream from the dam. Malouf said this is the fourth summer he has taken a class out on such a study. Last year he led a study of four occupation sites dating from 1750-1780 about 50 miles upstream from the dam.

"Our field work in that area is done now," Malouf said, "and we won't know where we will be able to work next summer until the park service negotiates its contracts again next spring."

Fall Registration To Be Sept. 21-27

Autumn quarter will get under way with the orientation and registration week for freshmen from Sept. 21-27. Registration for former students will be from Thursday through Saturday, Sept. 25-27, and instruction will begin Monday, Sept. 29.

Registration materials will be distributed Thursday, Sept. 25, from 1 to 4 p.m. in the basement of Main hall. Schedules of classes will not be available until registration begins.

Thanksgiving day, a holiday, will come on Thursday, Nov. 27. Final examinations will be given during the week of Dec. 15-19, after which Christmas recess begins. Winter quarter will start Jan. 5.

Summer Calendar Had Variety In 14 Workshops, Conferences

This summer 14 workshops and conferences offered many interesting opportunities for contact with fields other than regular university work.

Workshops in business education started the summer session. They were offered jointly by the schools of business administration and education, and featured demonstrations in business machines, lectures, and instruction on the newer methods of teaching shorthand, typing, and transcription. Louise Bernard, director of the School of Distributive Education of the College of William and Mary; Dr. E. Dana Gibson, a specialist in visual aids from San Diego State college; Philip S. Pepe, a specialist from Remington Rand; Laura Nicholson, supervisor from the State Department of Public Instruction; and Dr. C. T. Yerian, from Oregon State college, were the main speakers at these events.

MIA in Fifth Year

The fourth annual festival of the Montana Institute of the Arts was on the campus June 20-22. The MIA is a group of Montana citizens, about 1500, organized five years ago from among people who are interested in the arts generally. The institute was broken into eight sections, each dealing with one phase of the arts.

During the week of June 23-24, the seventh annual P-TA workshop on the MSU campus took place. More than 150 attended the meeting.

After the Fourth of July vacation the Rocky Mountain Institute for Chamber of Commerce Secretaries got under way. It was the thirteenth annual meeting on the campus and it lasted from July 6 to July 12. More than 100 chamber of commerce officials from the Rocky Mountain area attended the week-long school for concentrated instruction in their particular fields.

The same week the workshop in school and community health and safety was conducted. The work centered around the administrative aspects of the school-community health program for the school-age child.

A custodial workshop was under the direction of L. O. Thompson, at the same time the workshop No. 1 for case workers was under way, July 7-11.

The Northern Rocky Mountain Roundup of Regional Arts started July 14. It featured a series of intensive, two-week programs in crafts, such as weaving, hand-wrought jewelry, and enameling on metal. Doris Strachan handled the pottery class, Margaret Craft taught the jewelry class, Mary J. Larom conducted the enameling on metal, and Kathryn Lyon was the weaving instructor. The round-up, under the direction of H. V. Larom, lasted until Aug. 8.

The Educational Problems conference met from July 16 to 18, and workshop No. 2 for case workers finished the second half of its program on July 25. More than 330 school superintendents, principals, supervisors, teachers, and lay leaders had registered for the educational problems conference.

From July 21 to 26, Ray Eliot, University of Illinois football coach, Cecil Baker, basketball coach of the Utah Aggies, and Roland Logan, famous trainer, conducted the 1952 MSU coaching school. The week-long school instructed Montana coaches in basketball and football techniques and training practices, with special emphasis on high school coaching and training.

Publications Pow Wow and Music Camp dominated activities, including the Summer Session Sun, from July 27 to Aug. 9. Pow Wow was sponsored by the Montana Interscholastic Editorial association and the School of Journalism, July 27-Aug. 2, and Music Camp by the School of Music. The Music Teachers Institute also carried on during the same period as did the two-week unit course in music education.

Then there was the Conservation Education workshop from July 28 to Aug. 22 (now in session) and the unit course in Supervision for Public Welfare Workers from Aug. 4-15.

This summer session also saw an art exhibit by Sari Dienes, famous artist from New York. Her work, etchings, tempras, and water colors, was on display in the lounge of the Student Union. Peppino Mangravite, noted artist and head of Columbia University school of painting and sculpture, took part in the Regional Arts program. He lectured and gave both group and private criticism from July 26 to Aug. 2.

The conference that produced the most "names" was the Writers' conference which ended last week. Van Wyck Brooks, Pulitzer prize winner; David Davidson, author of "The Steeper Cliff," "The Hour of Truth," and "In Another Country"; Hilde Able, author of "The Lake," "Guests of Summer," and "Victory Was Slain;" Leslie A. Fielder, a frequent contributor of poetry and criticism to Partisan Review, Kenyon Review, and others; Peggy Simpson Curry, author of "Fire in the Water," which won the 1951 $25,000 Doubleday award; Norman Fox, author of 21 books and short stories; and Henry V. Larom, author of "The Mountain Pony" and winner of the Boys' Club American award in 1949.

Writers' Meeting

had agreed to come out to MSU instead of heading back to Italy and his wife and five children. But, of course, he too was glad he had come and gave three reasons for saying so. He was first glad because in such a meeting it renewed his faith in a true republic of letters. Here before him, he said, was a representative group who truly believed in and loved literature and the arts.

Secondly, it demonstrated that there also are widespread disagreements but it further proved that disagreements can exist between intelligent people. And lastly, he was refreshed to find the possibility of communication between human beings even though they disagree.

The high point of his visit was when the group disagreed with him and many of the women stood up and voiced their disagreement with loud "No, No, No." This, he said, was indeed very worth while.

Brooks Feels Rewarded

Van Wyck Brooks, Pulitzer prize winner and internationally known authority on American literature, said that he felt quite rewarded attending the first writers' conference he has ever been to. He said that he can't go along with the current feelings, expressed earlier by Fiedler and Davidson, of the depravity of man. He has confidence in men, although confidence is the thing that is lacking at present. He felt that people are very naive and wish to be led. The Germans produced a leader in Hitler and almost succeeded in upsetting the world. The reason is that the people are really weak and helpless and will follow a leader.

The future of writing is here in America, he said. Europe is exhausted and hanging on the ropes. Recently in England, several publishers tried in vain to find several good manuscripts. This is true not only of England but of Europe as a whole. Therefore, America must come to the front of the stage and strut in its hour of glory.

Here in America, Mr. Brooks feels that we trust other human beings, and that we must have this confidence in man. America has the vitality and the opportunity to give us the leading spot in the world of letters.

More from Audience Asked

Mr. Larom took over at this point and asked for questions or comments from the audience. Dr. H. G. Merriam, head of the English department, said that he felt there should be more participation from the audience and hoped that next year there will be more. Fiedler spoke up in favor of Brooks and Warren "Understanding Poetry" as a guide to a better understanding of the subject. Davidson added that the "Diary of Ann

MCHS Students Complete Study Football Sked Gives Team Nine Games

Thirty Missoula high school students spent five weeks on the University campus this summer taking a special conservation course under the direction of the School of Education.

The students, who enter their sophomore year at Missoula County high school this fall, attended classes in the Forestry building each morning from 8 to 12. They got a chance to learn the latest methods of conservation in addition to taking special instruction in drama, art, and individual project work related to the conservation movement.

Charles Mattill, Helena high school conservation teacher, directed the course with the assistance of Gladys Trambly of Missoula's Paxson school.

Education majors taking the methods and theory classes worked with Mattill in teaching the course. These university students taught some of the classes and prepared a series of lectures for the course.

The school day opened at 8 each morning with an hour of typing followed from 9 to 11 with the work in conservation and other fields. Physical education closed the day from 11 to 12.

Frank" was an excellent book and that all should read it. And a visitor from Canada said that she and two fellow members of a writers' club had come down to the conference, again not really knowing what to expect, and were welcomed with open arms. She thought this was wonderful and predicted that more will come next year.

The Grizzly football team has a nine-game schedule for 1952, but only three of the games are going to be held in Missoula.

The three home games will include a Sept. 20 tussle with Utah State college, the Homecoming game with Brigham Young university on Oct. 4, and a Dad's day game with the Montana State Bobcats on Nov. 1. Reserve seat season tickets for the three games will be $7.50.

Six of the games, including the first five games of the season, will be conference games. The Bobcat game, the game with Oregon at Eugene on Oct. 25, and the battle with Idaho over the Little Brown Stein at Moscow will be the only non-conference games.

Here is the schedule for 1952 as it now stands:

- Sept. 20—Utah State at Missoula.
- Sept. 27—Wyoming at Laramie.
- Oct. 4—Brigham Young at Missoula.
- Oct. 11—Denver at Denver.
- Oct. 18—Colorado A and M at Fort Collins.
- Oct. 25—Oregon at Eugene.
- Nov. 1—Montana State at Missoula.
- Nov. 8—Idaho at Moscow.
- Nov. 22—New Mexico at Albuquerque.

Degree Plans . . .

ervation of Montana historical sites. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bovey have been active in the restoration of Virginia City.

The commencement will be preceded by a march of candidates to the auditorium from Main hall, according to O. J. Bue, chairman of the commencement committee.

The commencement address will be given by Luther A. Richman, dean of the music school. The subject of his address will be, "The Fine Arts and Living." One of the nation's leading figures in music education, Richman was appointed dean of the music school Aug. 1. Previously he was director of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music.

The exercises will begin with an organ prelude by Mrs. DeLoss Smith, professor of organ, playing a choral by Bach, "Alas! What Must I, a Sinner, Do?"; and Partite 1 and 10; followed by Sonata No. 7, Op. 127 by Rheinberger.

The processional, also by Mrs. Smith, will be "Processional March, Op. 41, No. 5" by Guilman.

Following the processional, Rev. M. J. McPike, pastor of the First Baptist church, will give the invocation.

The exercises will then have music presented by the summer ensemble under the direction of John Lester, with Lois Cole accompanying. Their selections will be "The Lord's Prayer," by Malotte, and "Forever Worthy Is Thy Lamb," by Tchaikovsky.

Following the music, Dean Luther A. Richman of the School of Music will give the address, "The Fine Arts and Living."

Gordon B. Castle, senior academic dean, and J. E. (Burly) Miller, chairman of the department of history, will then present the candidates for the degrees. Pres. Carl McFarland will confer the degrees.

Following the conferring of degrees, the National Anthem will be sung, accompanied by Mrs. Smith.

The commencement benediction will be given by the Rev. Father Thomas Fenlon, Newman club chaplain.

For the recessional Mrs. Smith will play the "Triumphal March" from "Naaman," by Costa

Immediately following the exercises, a reception will be held in the Student Union lounge. Miss Catherine White, assistant librarian, is in charge of the reception.
