COURSE RATIONALE
Beebe, Beebe and Redmond (1999) write that “communication is at the core of our existence.... Most people spend between 80 and 90 percent of their waking hours communicating with others” (p.5). Beebe et al. explain that “it is through these interactions with others that we develop interpersonal relationships” (p.5). Our communication encounters create our identities. In addition, communication defines our relationships with friends, family, loved ones, and colleagues. Therefore, our understanding of interpersonal communication and the role we play in it will not only contribute to our sense of well-being and success in personal relationships, but to our success in work relationships as well. Furthermore, Beebe et al. (1999) write that communication affects the quality of our physical and emotional health” (p.9). In fact, supervisors recognize the importance of considering the communication skills of prospective employees. Grice and Skinner (2001) write, “In a 1999 report, the National Association of Colleges and Employers listed characteristics employers consider most important when hiring an employee. At the top of the list was communication skills” (p.6). Interpersonal Communication is particularly useful at the A.A.S. level as it is a type of communication that can be applied to many occupational fields.

COURSE PURPOSE
The purpose of this course is for students to become aware of their present communication styles and decide what is effective and what can be improved in order to build healthier relationships on an interpersonal level. Students will learn skills to help them manage conflict both in personal relationships and professional relationships. Communication will be viewed from both a verbal and nonverbal perspective. Communicating more clearly and listening more effectively will be addressed as well as the following topics: creating identities through communication, communication and emotion, interpersonal conflict management, creating healthy communication climates, gender communication, and cultural diversity and communication.

STUDENT PERFORMANCE OUTCOMES:
Upon completion of this course, the student will be able to:
1. Recognize communication patterns from family of origin.

2. Understand relational meaning of what we say both verbally and nonverbally, and the effect this has on relationships personally, professionally and in an educational capacity.

4. Practice skills in listening reflectively, attentively, and more empathetically.

5. Recognize passive, aggressive, passive-aggressive and assertive behaviors and learn how to deal more effectively with them through conflict management skills.

6. Understand how the quality of communication directly affects the quality of relationships and ultimately the quality of life.

7. Identify practical skills geared towards improving communication in the workplace, in personal relationships, and in the family.

8. Understand the role emotions play in communication.
