ARTHUR RIMBAUD

Huts are fashioned
with rhubarb to the ground,
the air dizzy with bees.
Along the rain forest
ants loosen the earth
and tunnel deep for loneliness.

The fever explores
your thigh; women
are nursing invalids
from this hot country.
(In delirium, the expedition through the Alps, a boat to Africa. Sails quarrel with the wind.)

You lie in a hammock
breathing the cotton soaked sweat.
Slaves dance naked through trees.
You imagine
the eye of a panther
skinned to death by flowers.
