Mutable Signs

Megan Jessop

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/oval

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/oval/vol9/iss2/13

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by ScholarWorks at University of Montana. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Oval by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at University of Montana. For more information, please contact scholarworks@mso.umt.edu.
When all is said and done,
I want to meet you here;
where the smoke of last winter’s fires
curl like histories into the atmosphere.
Where the horizon stands waiting to meet the dawn, as if caressing
the body of these mountains
before beginning her day.

We’ve exhausted all horoscope bed tales.
The ones that say things like:
“you will find love this year”
or “people will like you better
if you’re willing to learn from them.”
Perhaps “You’ve misread the stars again.”
We’ve spent countless raising suns in Venus
waiting for them to tell us that we’re all alright.

I used to lay awake with your breathing
seeping through dreams like déjà vu.
The charts never foretold this affair in the dark with your soul. I could never tell if I was reliving your presence.
How many times have we walked this galaxy,
before the stars grew weary of footfall
and shook themselves
into dust at our doorsteps?