One Hot Day in October

Linda Bierds

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Recommended Citation
Bierds, Linda (1979) "One Hot Day in October," CutBank: Vol. 1 : Iss. 13 , Article 8.
Available at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank/vol1/iss13/8

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by ScholarWorks at University of Montana. It has been accepted for inclusion in CutBank by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at University of Montana. For more information, please contact scholarworks@mso.umt.edu.
ONE HOT DAY IN OCTOBER

You wait in a corner of the schoolyard, damp in your peppered cords. At last, down soft, sucking asphalt your father’s car comes shimmering toward you.

You have never been swimming together and you sing down the country roads, past barns and withering pumpkins. His collar is open. His false teeth curve in his pocket like the hoof of a tiny horse.

You walk through madronna leaves to the harbor.

In the shadow of a huge stone you turn from each other. When you look again, his skin is the color of sliced pears. His bathing suit is deep blue wool, with a belt, and a buckle where a slim woman arcs in a swan dive.

He dives through the water. His hair flows from his head like kelp. He is turning. He is kicking and stroking with a smooth, terrible grace you have never seen. He is the sea for you. He is the pelican lurching through a long, white sky. You will swim in his wake forever.