Spring 1980

Repartee translated by David Keller and Donald Sheehan

Eugenio Montale

Let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank/vol1/iss14/44

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by ScholarWorks at University of Montana. It has been accepted for inclusion in CutBank by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at University of Montana. For more information, please contact scholarworks@mso.umt.edu.
REPARTEE

I ‘Arsenio’ (she writes me), ‘I here “taking the air” among my somber cypresses think that it’s time to suspend the so much by-you-for-me desired suspension of all worldly illusions; that it’s time to set sail and hang up the epoche.

Don’t tell me the weather’s foul, that even turtle-doves have flown south with a flicker of wings. I cannot live on memories any more. Better the bite of ice than your torpor of sleepwalking, O late awakened.’

II Scarcely out of adolescence I was thrown for half my life into the Augean stables.

I didn’t find the two thousand oxen, I didn’t even see a single animal; yet in the runways forever thickening with manure I stumbled on gasping for breath. But day by day crescendoed lowings that were wholly human. He wasn’t seen, even once, though the hinds still waited for the call to arms: overjammed funnels, pitchforks, kitchen-spits, and a rotting row of saltimbocca. And not once did He show a royal robe’s hem or diadem’s tip above the ebony bastions, excremental.
Then year by year—and who kept count of that dark night's seasons?—some hand that probed for invisible fissures finally insinuated its memento: a curl of Gerti's, a cricket in a cage, final trace of Liuba's trek, the microfilm of a too-too-elaborate sonnet slipped from the fingers of Clizia numb with sleep, a click-clack of wooden shoes (the crippled maid from Monghidoro) until from the cracks the machineguns' cross-fire cut us down—exhausted workmen caught in the act by magistrates of the mud.

And finally it fell with a thud: the inconceivable.

To free us, to stop up the tangle of tunnels in a lake, was a moment's work for the churning Alpheus. Who awaited Him now? What deep meaning had that new quagmire? and the breathing of other, yet equal stenches? and the turning and turning on rafts of dung? and was that obscene slug from the sewers sunshine of the chimneys, were they men perhaps, actual living men, those giant ants on the docks?

(I think that you've probably stopped reading this. But now you know everything about me, about my imprisonment and afterwards; now you know the eagle cannot be born from the rat.)

translated by
David Keller and Donald Sheehan