12 Whereas, The need to purchase menstrual hygiene products places a disproportionate financial
13 burden on some but not all students who attend the University of Montana;

14
15 Whereas, Attending a university will likely be cause for significant temporal and financial 16 limitations on a student, and inhibit their access to capital;

17
18 Whereas, It is not equitable that some students should be made to pay out of pocket for products
19 necessary for hygiene pertaining to biological processes, particularly while this financial burden
20 does not affect other students on campus;

21
22 Whereas, The University of Montana (UM) supplies toilet paper in all campus restrooms;

23
24 Whereas, Menstrual products are available for an amount of money either in restrooms or shops
25 on campus;

26
27 Whereas, UM supplies free contraceptives on multiple places on campus;

28
29 Whereas, Multiple states have passed legislation requiring that schools supply free menstrual
30 hygiene products in school bathrooms²;

31
32 Whereas, Other universities, including the University of Washington, provide gratuitous
33 menstrual hygiene products in all campus restrooms³;
