FOR RELEASE SUNDAY, MARCH 5

The Visiting Scientist Program sponsored by the Montana Academy of Sciences and supported by a grant from the National Science Foundation is in full swing, reports Dr. John P. Robinson. The Montana State University botanist is state director of the program designed to stimulate interest in science in junior and senior high school students.

Lectures are scheduled at Lockwood School, Billings, on Monday by Elmer Anderson, instructor in geography and geology at Eastern Montana College of Education, and at Wibaux County High School March 13 and Forsyth High School March 14 by Dr. Ludvig G. Browman, professor of zoology at MSU. Anderson's topic will be "The U. S. Needs Scientists and Mathematicians," and Dr. Browman's will be "Human Inheritance."

Fourteen of the 60 topflight scientists selected for participation in the program have lectured in schools in Montana to date, Dr. Robinson noted.

Lecturers presented so far are Dr. John J. Taylor of the MSU microbiology faculty, at Frenchtown; Dr. Charles C. Bradley, dean of the Montana State College Division of Letters and Science, at Willow Creek; Prof. Robert J. McRae of the EMC physics faculty, at Billings Central Catholic High School; Prof. Adam W. Miller Jr., head of the MSC Psychology Department, at Belgrade; Dr. James W. Gebhart, director of science education at MSU, at Glasgow; Dr. Joseph Hashisaki of the MSU mathematics faculty, at Columbia Falls and Kalispell.

William A. Stannard of Northern Montana College Mathematics Department, at Shelby; Dr. Frederick H. Young of the MSU mathematics faculty, at Girls Central High School, Butte; Dr. John de la Montagne of the MSC geology faculty, at Manhattan Christian High School; Dr. Bruce B. Murray of the MSC chemistry faculty, at Anaconda Central High School; Dr. Charles N. Caughlan, MSC professor of chemistry, at
