Crosspollination—

Some times it takes a bee to make the clover sing.
Other times wind brings golden grain. Someone once thought it clever to put paper bags in tall corn and that corn grew taller until its ears could;
hear dancing stars.

Tonight, it's warm. I listen for tiny voices light years send our way before the loud moon can rise with her full song. Someone is playing a radio. It crackles static around the flapper tune Mother used to hum under her breath whenever Father was gone.
