FOR RELEASE SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 4

How taxpayers will be affected by automation in the processing of federal income tax returns will be taken up at the Montana State University 1962 Institute on Taxation and Estate Planning, according to Lester R. Rusoff, professor of law and institute director.

The subject^{of}/automated data processing will be covered by F. W. Bearman, director of the Internal Revenue Service Western Service Center, Ogden, Utah. Bearman will explain what the use of computers in processing returns will mean to taxpayers. He is scheduled to speak Friday, Nov. 30, the opening day of the two-day institute, which is sponsored by the MSU Law School.

In 18 years with the IRS, Bearman has held positions involving the audit of tax returns and the internal audit of IRS operations. For the past five years, as director of the Western Center, he has worked with the use of data processing methods and has been concerned with studies of federal tax legislation and administration.
