Associated Students of the State University of Montana
Independents Make Plans In Main Hall

Baron Will Discuss Problems in Meeting for 4 o’Clock

After the ad hoc committee on organization considered the complete failure of the independent and non-affiliated students of the campus and decided that steps for their organization were essential, the group had the final word as to the formation of a club at 4 o’clock. An exception was made in the case of the independents, the only space being made for them. All independents are urged to be on hand and attend the meeting next Wednesday afternoon. Announcement of plans for independent activities will be made as well as possible schedules of lecture. The speakers of the executive council last week mentioned the possibility of the general meeting of the council being held for the purpose of announcing the plans. A call for the students to attend the meeting is expected.

EACH year along towards the end of springtime comes fishing season. The Montana Fish and Game Commission is in the process of opening the season to those who have the patience and skill to utilize the resources while the water is still cool. By the time one is through there is synonymous with late spring and early summer. Think of the many days prior to May 21 that the devotees have been dreaming of their favorite lakes and wondering what the fish and fly will prove most exact to the trout seeking in Montana waters.

Perhaps in Missoula students at the State University have been too busy to think of fishing, playing sports, singing reeds and fish fry. In any case they will have to wait until the summer vacation to take up the sport. This year student fisherman will have a new type of license. The law passed by the legislature permits big game hunting, but is sold only to those people who own and operate a motor boat. The licenses will cost $1.00 and a $5.00 million bond was passed on the first page of theenda of the year, the whole thing will be over. All worries will be left behind, vacation trips will start, books will be read, and the long awaited “summer” time will come.

Fishing Time

The proposed Austro-German economic pact seems far removed from the essence of sunshine in the world of today, for the stories have been striving to show that this is the last meeting of the year, thousands of dollars and properties will be given and the third-fourteenth Commencement University will be ended.

For the rest of the week the students will have the opportunity of looking upon the year’s accomplishments and the possibility of the future. By the end of the week, the whole thing will be over. All worries will be left behind, vacation trips will start, books will be read, and the long awaited “summer” time will come.

This Week

We'll just about two weeks more of this quarter left and then school of the year will be over, leaving for some a long vacation, for others just a few days, not much time at all. One for more than two hundred seniors, none. To be exact it will be two weeks more of the Junior Prom without fear of being embarrassed in front of others. The President's reception will be held next Monday—just six days from today.

If course for the rest of us final examinations from Tuesday to Friday of next week will serve as an anticlimax to the semester activities, ending this year with the annual Junior Prom. On the next day, Friday, the second annual May Fete presentation of a “Midsummer Night's Dream” will be given and on Saturday should Willie Cole, the Colli Hall, be presented by the University band and the Associated Women Students' lantern parade on the lawns of the Old Country Club.

Sunday evening at the men's gymnasium President Charles H. Clapp will address the Montana seniors who will be guests of the University Symphony orchestra, Deena Doolin and Smith Emerson orchestra.

Missoula is in the final stage of the week, the event students look forward to all through their academic period and the event which has the most memories of which is remembered longest when it is over—Commencement. The commencement exercises will be held at 2:30 on Sunday afternoon. All the class of 1931 will be present.

Dramatic Organization Founded Approximately 188 Days Before Thanksgiving

Producing approximately 140 plays of various types, the University of Montana Dramatic Organization has continued to thrive. The main focus of the group has been the annual fall assembly, a tradition that dates back to 1904. Each year, the group presents a variety of plays, ranging from serious dramas to light comedies, to entertain and engage the audience.

In 1904, the first dramatic group was organized by Dr. Merle M. Thompson, the first head of the Department of Fine Arts. The group included members from various departments, including the School of Architecture, the School of Business, and the School of Music.

In the fall of 1927, William O’Casey, a well-known playwright, was invited to give a public lecture and co-operate with the Dramatic Society. He later went on to write his famous play “The Moon of the Moors” and was awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1928.

The Dramatic Society has continued to produce plays throughout the years, with notable directors including Carl Glick, who directed “The Bad Man” in 1924, and Leaphart, who directed “The Waltz” in 1911.

The group has also been involved in other university activities, such as the University Symphony Orchestra, which has performed at numerous concerts throughout the years.

In the fall of 1931, the Dramatic Society presented a production of “The Bad Man” under the direction of C. Y. Riedley. This was the group’s last season, as the director, Mr. Glick, had already left Montana and was at the University of Utah.

Since its founding, the Dramatic Society has produced many memorable performances, and has continued to thrive as a vital part of the University of Montana community.

Mr. P. Clark Begins New Study Plans

Shortened Time in Reading Language is Purpose of Experiment

The problem of shortening time required for study of a foreign language to acquire a good reading knowledge of that language is the object of an experimental being conducted by Dr. P. Clark, instructor of foreign languages.

Professor Clark believes that reading and speaking skills will be the determinative factors in the study of languages, and that more time is often required in the study of languages than in the acquisition of these skills.

Study was initiated by the study of German, the ancient language of the Romans, which is still in course in the same way as Latin and English. The results of this study will be published soon in a paper to be released.
