The meeting was called to order by Kay Hudson.

SOCIAL AND ACADEMIC HONOR SYSTEM

Eyer said that when he consulted with Social Standards Committee, they suggested that his committee take the plan to the students. A copy of his report is included in the minutes.

Briggs said that the original motion was to study rules and regulations. He asked if the committee consulted all concerned. He said research and investigation that the committee did are important in our decision. He asked if the plan was discussed with Clow and Wunderlich. Eyer said that it had been discussed with Clow and Wunderlich in Montana Forum and in Social Standards Committee meeting. He said he had discussed it with student groups such as Mortor Board and Silent Sentinel.

Briggs asked if there are faculty members on the Legislative Council. He asked if the person who has final responsibility (faculty) would not want to have something to say about the rules. Eyer said that there will be one faculty advisor on the Men's Senate and one on the Women's Senate. He said the deans would have an advisory capacity.

Wunderlich said that the deans should be able to work with the counseling process to be effective. Eyer said that any clinical problems would be referred to the deans. He said he thought that the majority of student problems can be taken over by the students.

Briggs asked if the policy can be consistent on the Honor Council if there are no faculty members on it. Eyer said that he thinks the students on the committee will be conservative. Hudson said that the faculty are ultimately responsible for the student's conduct. They have administrative power and final veto.

Hudson said that if girls in a living group give campuses for minor lates, they will probably be more strict than AWS is now. She said that when a girl is late the whole house would be dishonored rather than just the one girl. She said the system would make a stronger organization than now.

Hudson said that the men's senate would give the men a stronger part in student government. Eyer said it would be a part of student government.

Hudson said that they'd like to start the academic honor system next fall quarter. She said that the plan that Eyer outlines would accommodate both the social and academic honor systems. She said they want to take the information to the students this week and get their opinion.

Hudson said that when a test is given the instructor will pass it out, answer any questions and then leave the room. However he should stay near by in case students have questions. She said that the following methods of reporting cases who cheat have been suggested: 1) tap a pencil if anyone in the room is cheating, 2) Signing or failure to sign an honor pledge at the completion of a test, 3/ Verbal report to the Honor Council.

She said that if a person fails to sign the honor pledge, it would not mean that he cheated. The pledge would be so worded so that anyone who saw cheating going on would not sign the pledge. She said that faculty members could turn cases of cheating into the Honor Council also.
Hudson said that the Honor Council works best in the academic field. Eyer said the Honor Council would take care of such things as cheating in tests.

Hudson asked if the board approves of the organizational plan and if the board approves of it being submitted to the students. Eyer said that if Central Board accepts, it is part of their duties to educate the students on the plan.

Hoiness suggested that the plan be taken to a student vote on Aber Day. He said we need a large student vote because the results would have to be taken to the State Board of Education. Burnell said that the plan won't be ready by Aber Day.

Hoiness moved that the principle of a Social and Academic Honor System be put to a student vote on Aber Day. It was seconded and passed by a vote of 7 to 0, one abstained.
