Monday night's Simon Fraser-Montana basketball game at Adams Fieldhouse will feature a repeat of the Family Night promotion that was in effect for the Grizzly-Portland State game December 28.

UM Ticket Manager Gary Hughes said the Family Night promotion will enable the entire family (maximum of two adults and six children) to attend the Grizzly-Clansmen game for a flat fee. Mom, Dad and all the kids can have general admission seating for $3 or reserved seats for $4.

Hughes said the reserved seats are now on sale at the Fieldhouse. The general admission tickets will only be sold on Monday.

"We had a good response to this promotion for the Portland State game and we felt that it would be worthwhile to repeat it. College basketball is something the family can enjoy together and the family rate makes it inexpensive entertainment," Hughes said.

In addition, the University has invited high school basketball teams from throughout Western Montana to attend Monday night's game free of charge.

The Simon Fraser contest will be Montana's last nonconference game of the season. The Clansmen of Burnaby, British Columbia, are currently sporting an 11-7 record.
