The Flower Cutters

Joel Huerta

Let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank/vol1/iss36/7

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by ScholarWorks at University of Montana. It has been accepted for inclusion in CutBank by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at University of Montana. For more information, please contact scholarworks@mso.umt.edu.
The Flower Cutters

1.
A teen in time of war dances closer during slow songs.
He grows his hair . . . roams the lane of brothels,
where whores dye garments black in kettles for funerals of student brothers buried at morning.

And these people pass the firewater jug, door to shanty door. Their children gnaw at sugar cane plugs.

This strip, La Avenida, is on a hillcrest.
Stars blister above. For these stargazers
the stars are clear, are payment, given that here porch lights forgive and burn red.

2.
All weekend: morning funerals and afternoon weddings.
The folks wear black satin then white voile.

Peasants make good business cutting flowers on volcano Izalco. The bundled gladioli on their backs like quivers of arrows for some afterbattle, where the dead are ushered into the windowed parlor of the family album.

During noon naps the boys take flowers off graves, alter the sunburst symmetry of the coronals, sell the same flowers to the groom's mother.

Honeymoon is in the parent's house. After muted consummation, she educates his heart in the math of love.

She sleeps, her locks scribble on the pillow. He reads and learns and folds away.

3.
San Salvador is dead asleep.
So take notice of what it is that happens: How in the processions sunflowers stop tracking the sun to follow the silver trains of brides.

How the streetsmart drinks an egg for hangover. How the couple, not in love, unravels in the morning, swab their crotches . . . dress.
How they execute the sign of the cross, march out through flitting grasshoppers.