MISSOULA, Mont.--

Lured by his favorite sport, fishing, Al Feldman of Denver, Colo., president of Frontier Airlines, is vacationing in Missoula this summer while the rest of his family is attending classes at the University of Montana.

Mrs. Feldman, a graduate of Cornell University with a degree in mechanical engineering, said the combination of good fishing for her husband and interesting academic opportunities for herself and the children influenced the family to choose Missoula for this summer's vacation. Mrs. Feldman said she is particularly impressed by the "intimate, friendly UM campus."

David Feldman, 18, is being tutored in trigonometry by a UM graduate student in mathematics. John, 16, is attending an astronomy course. Susan, 13, is involved in the 1974 Montana High School Fine Arts Camp at UM, concentrating on drawing and painting. Mrs. Feldman is taking a history course entitled "Women in America: The Historical Perspective."

Al Feldman, who commutes between Denver and Missoula each weekend, said Missoula is "just great."

Asked if the family was drawn by Missoula's scenic location, Feldman said: "It's the people who make Missoula special. Scenery you can find anywhere. Few places have as many friendly people."

A graduate of both Cornell University and the Executive Program of Stanford University's Graduate School of Business, Feldman was formerly president of Aerojet Nuclear Systems Company, a firm located in Sacramento, Calif.

He is an associate fellow of the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics (AIAA) and has authored scientific papers for AIAA, the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the New York Academy of Sciences.
