Family, Easter Portrait, 1952

Danny Rendleman
1.
Looked at one way, it's as though someone took his hand and rubbed it across us while the print was still wet.

We blur into one another, into the redemptive sky, into both memory and belief. We squint into spring sun, grouped like reflections in a department store window, squeezed together and tentative, brash, but not ready for what we're in the middle of.

2.
The gals wear corsages, the guys their clean shirts and forced smiles like Sunday next-to-best.

There, leaning out of the picture, someone's dog. Here, leaning in, a grandchild or slow cousin, birds on a wire, fields of chicory, a brand-new Pontiac with a wooden heart dangling from the rear view mirror:

Forever is carved there. And Always. I was seven years old.
Abstractions amazed me.

3.
Looked at another, this is what I have to offer up, where I come from, what I prize.

My friends and lovers see me in all the noses and postures and visions, the personality.

But especially they see the long holiday stretching out, and the weedy grins, and the small space that seems to separate each and every one in the photo, that little gray patch that serves as edge.
