Seedtime

William Jolliff
Grey afternoon left in a huff, crushing out its spit-ragged butt between the rows of broken stalks.

November dark fell hard, and now, as greasy and cold as the winter mud, on his back beneath his first John Deere, his kidneys aching with cornstalks and a mortgage, lies the boy who played first base for Leesburg.

He's not thinking, as you might—God, I'm weary—let the damn combine fall off its blocks. Nor is he hoping that the girl will have herself—and that means you, too—fixed. Tired and twisted, he wishes only to wrench the Visegrips out of his back Levis pocket, scrunch them around inside his coveralls, up and through his front zipper, then to lock them around this one stuck nut. That done, to buy this farm and a dozen others.

Tonight, he's the old grey mutt that howls in your dreams, barks at the slowness of your rising, as you were another seed, bitching in his thighs, making him ache for a new plow and a thousand acres, always for spring and sowing.
