Introducing Thy Salt Bride

Christopher Davis

Let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank/vol1/iss41/14
Christopher Davis

Introducing Thy Salt Bride

Last night, to change waste into bright clay,
I gulped a whole bottle of green food dye.

Having faked a deadly illness just to stay home I guzzle up a tumbler of red wine. Come sunset, the kitchen ceiling's white fluorescent glowing seems the soul's half-tasted vanilla in my wet roof.

Should last night's boiled beef stink of death, the stainless cauldron sunk in suds? Cheap greasy soap clouds bury fumes down deep into my nervous little endings, my damp tissue.

Wild rats scampering in circles in white walls,
I guess I chose not to add red. Giggling,

I rub green all over my pink bedspread, down into my feather-flabby pillow, skull-impressed:

I smear shit prints across flaming plateglass, dreams feeling deep into our avocado grove's black shadows: look out: two ghosts glow, their limbs white crooked bones in the placenta of green leaves: I'm that fool kneeling in moist rot, a cold snake chilling one palm pressing skin down into the grave, my left hand's talons curled around our Savior's purse, His serpent enlarging, stuffing this maw. Can't His glare pierce this soft skull, spy His meat lit inside my tongue revolving this way, sliding, twisting all around Him, forth, back? Dare I look up into my eyes?

Please press a palm down on my hair to show pleasure. I pull back palm and fingers from white heat, my mouth empty. I strip down, show my tingling flesh, shove my brown tan up against the surface of our eye, paint its salt sweat around across the burning globe, trapped in this filament body I have no choice but to keep lit a few more nights, that you may try.