32 PARTICIPATING AT UNIVERSITY IN LAND USE PLANNING SHORT COURSE

MISSOULA--

A total of 32 persons, including several from out-of-state communities, are participating through Friday (Aug. 3) in the Short Course in Land Use Planning at the University of Montana, Missoula.

During the course, experts in various fields and a number of panelists have presented remarks dealing with various areas of land use planning. They have considered land use planning from the point of view of aesthetics, the humanities, behavioral and natural sciences, and political action and communications in both broad and specific terms.

Fiscal and academic arrangements for the course were prepared by the UM Division of Extension and Continuing Education. William C. Hollenbaugh, UM associate professor of forestry, is coordinator of the short course, which began July 23.

A listing of the short course registrants follows.
