FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

The Division of Indian Services, an office designed to coordinate allied efforts of the University, in behalf of the Indians of Montana, was established at the University of Montana this week. It will operate as a section of the University Foundation, it was announced by Tom Collins, Director of Statewide Services.

For a long time, the University has maintained various programs that have a bearing on Indian matters in the field of anthropology, in law and in sociology. The new division will function as a clearing house and coordinator of all such programs. According to Collins, "The University has already demonstrated its competence in this field and it is our hope to do a better job of upgrading the welfare of Indians."
