Summer 1995

Variation on the Idea of Crowds

Ed Skoog

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank/vol1/iss44/11

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by ScholarWorks at University of Montana. It has been accepted for inclusion in CutBank by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at University of Montana. For more information, please contact scholarworks@mso.umt.edu.
Ed Skoog

Variation on the Idea of Crowds

I go into crowds, hoping for riot, and I know a crowd is an amalgam of the general crush, like prison or an epic. I go into a crowd’s ontogeny, mark the move to grown from embryo, moving face to face.

Going into crowds, I hope a tyro will tutor me in what is still young, show me new divisions among the turks preening, subscribers to an abstract cool.

In the crowd my eyes dart from dirt to rain, picking out which brawlers would start a fight, guessing who in the crowd presides, lead starling in a scarf of starlings wrapped around a river, asteroidal revolutionaries, flying tories; or which gang plans to start fires under the dinner tables; which clique’s old age will mostly be spent dusting silver nitrate under roses.

There are groups in the crowd covered in sores.
In crowds are islands that seem oases.
I go into crowds to learn how to move many as one, the latest pattern of bones going into the body, occipital tori, the many tendons of the wrist, inside the gala of ribs the salsa of organs red and moving like featured performers, riotous heart and lungs someone’s mama felt longing under a taut belly, or saw through the gamma broadcast clipped to the doctor’s light, curled baby bones, fetal catafalque, each facet and cleft fleshed out by the doctor’s pen, actual fetal development unimportant: there is the one projected skeleton featuring us, in the medical room, doctor rushing toward other patients, each of us trying to remain parental to this white sketch against a black faucet, a claque to fawn it into morning.

And at the base of the X-rayed neck a solarium glows warm, the neckbones concatenating towards the face even now woven around a sucked thumb that must taste like sourballs, the kid’s wince transfers to the transparency so terribly.

There must be something valuable in thumbs. They are crowded into so many mouths, cedilla for the chin, ladled by a fist.