ALCOHOL BEHAVIOR COURSE
BEGINS JAN. 24 IN RONAN

MISSOULA--

Dr. James M. Schaefer, assistant professor of anthropology at the University of Montana in Missoula, will teach a course on alcohol-related behavior at the Alcohol Center in Ronan. The class will meet from 9 a.m. to noon each Saturday beginning Jan. 24.

Title of the course is "Drink, Drank, Drunk: an Anthropological Seminar." The class is offered for three graduate or undergraduate credits through the UM Center for Continuing Education and Summer Programs at a cost of $63 for those taking the course for credit. Cost of the course for class auditors is $31.50.

The course is designed to familiarize the student with reasons why people drink. Special attention will be given to Native American drinking behavior. During the course students will have an opportunity to test their own physiological reactions to a standardized amount of alcohol.

The class will focus on a review of Montana laws that pertain to alcohol, state educational programs and other alcohol-related programs.

Students may register for the course during the first class meeting Saturday, Jan. 24, at 9 a.m. in the trailer behind the Ronan Alcohol Center.

For more information about the course, contact the UM Center for Continuing Education and Summer Programs, room 107, Main Hall, University of Montana, Missoula, Mont. 59801, or phone 243-2900.
