MISSOULA--

John C. McNulty, Minneapolis, Minn., treasurer of the American Judicature Society and recently appointed chairman of the American Bar Association Committee on Professional Discipline, will give the keynote address at an American Judicature Society (AJS) luncheon at noon Monday, Oct. 18, in the Montana Rooms of the University Center at the University of Montana.

The luncheon for American Judicature Society members, guests and individuals interested in the development of programs for improving the administration of justice is part of a series of luncheons sponsored by the AJS to acquaint lawyers with the problems of court modernization, relate innovative court improvements and report on AJS activities.

McNulty will also speak to UM law school students on professional ethics at 10 a.m. Monday, Oct. 18th.

A practicing attorney, McNulty has a broad background in the court modernization area. He was chairman of the Minnesota Citizens Conference on Courts and a member of the Minnesota Governor's Committee on Law Enforcement & Administration of Justice and Corrections. He was also a panelist at the National Conference on the Courts in 1971. McNulty is a graduate of the School of Law, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis.

Robert E. Sullivan, dean of the UM law school, who has arranged the luncheon, is a member of the board of directors of AJS. Sullivan said, "The American Judicature Society is the only national organization devoted exclusively to the promotion of a better judicial system."

The AJS was founded in 1913 by Herbert Lincoln Harley, a leader of the court modernization movement, as a result of discontent with the U.S. court system. The purpose of the AJS is to promote the effective administration of justice. AJS membership is composed of judges, lawyers and laymen who are dedicated to bringing about needed changes in the court system.
