DREXLER PLANS SPEECH
AT RECREATION MEET

Arthur Drexler, curator of the department of architecture and design at New York's famed Museum of Modern Art, will be the banquet speaker at the Montana Recreation Conference, April 29. The banquet, held jointly with the Missoula Community Improvement Commission, will close the two-day recreation conference, according to Arnold Bolle, dean of the UM forestry school.

The conference is intended to coordinate recreational planning in this part of the nation. In attendance will be legislators, community leaders, architects, and organizational representatives from industry, agriculture, government, labor, education, women's groups and the press.

The banquet is open to the public.
