U.S.S. Stockdale

To Honor Ex-Student

A new war-ship will bear the name of a former student of MSU.

Ensign Lewis Stephen Stockdale, USNR, a member of the Phi Sigma Kappa at the University in 1934, was killed in action Dec. 7, 1941, when the U.S.S. Oklahoma capsized at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.

Ensign Stockdale was the first former student known to be a casualty in the present war. Launched by his mother, Mrs. L. C. Stockdale, the U.S.S. Stockdale will slide into the water tomorrow morning.

Stockdale was born in Anaconda in 1914. He attended Queen Anne High School in Seattle. After transferring to MSU in 1934 from Armstrong College in Berkeley, Cal., he enlisted in the United States Navy Air Corps in 1937.

National Figures to Speak To MSU Combined Students

Four nationally known figures will be on the campus Nov. 4 to speak to the Army detachment and to University students, Larrae Haydon announced yesterday. These men are Rabbi Albert I. Rabbi Gordon is a graduate of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, New York City. For the past 12 years he has been the rabbi of Adath Jeshurun Synagogue in Minneapolis. He was ordained a minister of the Evangelistic Church, and held pastorates in Wisconsin for 14 years. During this time, he has directed more than 700 programs in the state in interest of interfaith understanding.

Grizzly Cubs Paint Symbol On Sentinel

Tomorrow at 1 o'clock, a long line of frosh will toil up the slopes of Mount Sentinel as in years past, to give the Grizzly M its traditional fall whitewash. This year's line will be almost wholly female, with the stronger sex, represented by Bill Jesse, frosh president; Irv Pearson, Chief Grizzly; Ed Voldseth and George Prlain, Bearpaws, overseeing the job. Freshman men will lug the sacks to the top, but freshman women will do the dirty work with broom and whitewash. This year the Spurs will take over for the Bearpaws in assisting the frosh.

In filling the painters' shoes vacated by freshman men of the campus, the frosh women are preserving a tradition that has withstood wind and fog, moving and time.

The first M was built for the University some 31 years ago of wood. It stood erect, supported by props and showed up to a fine advantage from the campus in the valley below. Came one big wind and the wooden M toppled over.

Undaunted, the Grizzlies erected another upright M. It met the same fate.

In 1914, two years after the building of the first M, James E. Bonner of the School of Forestry surveyed the present site at 100 feet. Later enlargements stretched the site to 110 feet and finally to its present size of 120 feet.

One famous whitewash job was started by ambitious frosh on a foggy day. Inclement weather conditions complicated the job, but the ingenious frosh formed a quarter of a mile bucket line to hand the rocks down the line to those who laid the stones in their proper places.

An exceedingly smug frosh class in years back trudged up the hill with best intentions, but on reaching the site decided that their own class numerals were of far greater importance than the big M and so

Staffs Exceed Drive Quota

Montana State University's staff, employees of the State Correspondence school, and the permanent staff of the 317th College Training Detachment of the Army Air Forces exceeded their quota of $1,000 for the Missoula War Chest Fund by $400.

Charles W. Leaphart, president, congratulated the State employees and Army personnel for their response to the drive.

"I wish to call attention to and congratulate the staff of the University and of certain services associated with it upon the excellent response to the solicitation for funds for the Missoula War Chest Fund," said President Leaphart.

"The committee in charge of the drive," he said, "had assigned as the quota $1,000. That quota has already been exceeded by $400."

Below is a signed column expressing the opinion of one of our University students. It is not an expression of Kaimin editorial policy. But our editorial policy is the publication of any and all signed student opinion. We hope for a rebuttal to Mr. Castile's column by some University, ROTC or aviation student, or faculty member.

Personally we disagree violently with Mr. Castile. Perhaps it is because we disagree so violently that we have sent this material to press. Suppression of its publication would in itself endorse the methods Mr. Castile advocates. We're not afraid of corrupting MSU ideals. We believe Kaimin readers can think for themselves. We bring this column to your attention.

BEHIND The International Front

By GERALD CASTILE

THE UNITED STATES: Regent of Civilization

The United States at the conclusion of this war must prove to the world that she is worthy of continuing as a leading international power. We must adopt a policy of protection toward the smaller countries less able to defend themselves, and should that protection be questioned by the slightest over act we must be prepared to react in a most emphatic manner not likely to be misunderstood.

We must realize that the period of the small independent state is passing and we must hasten the advent of that date with every means at our disposal. The coming order of things will tend toward the confederation of like powers and a more solid authority over those who chose to remain alone in their national progress.

The United States must don the royal purple and become the recognized leader in any confederation of states that may be formed. To accomplish this we must first become strong internally. We must adopt compulsory military training beginning when the child is 12 years old and terminating with two years of actual military service. All students must be taught more history dealing with the glorious military traditions of our country, and those of foreign states as well. A fresh vigor of thought and action will then be instilled into the citizen of the new America.

Our government must begin the gradual and imperceptible change to a majority party system, and so become more centralized in theory, form, and practice. The weaker elements of society must be slowly dissolved until the government reaches a position of strength and singleness of purpose that will enable it to become the overlord of civilization.

The establishment of such a governmental system will preclude the possibility of future wars, and should such wars occur they could be crushed with ridiculously little effort.

Face the facts America! We are emerging from the "Victorian" age of our grandparents and entering an era that promises untold benefits to those that accept a "government of the strong."

SO LITTLE TIME— John P. Marquand.

Is a brilliant satire, sparkling humor, with deep seriousness behind them both—a provocative picture of America, the America of booms and depressions, of isolationists and interventionists, between World I and World War II.

WINTER'S TALES— Karen Blixen.

The 11 stories in this volume are distinguished fiction by any standard. Sometimes elusive, often fragile, but, in a quiet way, vigorous and intense, each story gives the reader sheer pleasure.

A MINGLED CHIME— Thomas Beecham.

One of the world's greatest conductors and composers here tells the full story of his varied life. Sir Thomas has been conducting orchestras since the early years of this century. He has known all the great of the musical world; he has observed keenly; and he records his experiences—up to 1942—with all the humor, ease and fluency of a born writer.

RAAF Cadets Favor MSU in a Big Way

1. We're a long way from home and we don't need to be reminded of it constantly.
2. Australia is not all kangaroos.
3. We do speak English.
4. Australia is not all desert country.
5. We very likely don't know your son who is in Sydney because there's more than a 1,000,000 other people living there.

After having been in the United States about a month four Australian boys from the RAAF used the above five answers to illustrate the questions Americans usually ask them. The cadets, Jim Grady, Tom Cook, John Harrington, and Peter Green, trained at ground school in Australia. From there they were sent to training centers in Canada to complete their flying. They arrived in the United States about four weeks ago and then were sent to various training posts in Canada. As their post was not ready to classify them immediately, some were given two weeks leave, which they decided to spend in the States. "Via their thumbs" they arrived in Missoula Friday, Oct. 8. After inspecting the Garden City they went to Spokane Sunday, Oct. 10, and then returned to Missoula the following Tuesday to spend the rest of their leave.

Difficulty with Traffic
Cars driving on opposite sides of the road from the ones in Australia was the first thing they noticed after arriving on American soil. They said that they at first found it difficult to keep from being run over. Neon lights and headlights blazing at night with no sign of a dim-out were welcome sights according to the Aussies. Asked about what they thought of American girls they said: "They compare very favorably with the ones in Australia." In Australia a "skirt" is known as a "good sort" or a "bonzer sheila." Although fascinated by the way Americans jitterbug, they emphatically stated that in Australia the accepted mode of dancing is to glide.

Australians don't play football the American way, but they have five types of their own that could easily match any American game. Our grid stars go onto the field well-padded for battle, but Australians wear only sweaters, shorts and boots. In a game lasting 80 minutes with only one 10 minute rest period and no substitutes a large reserve of energy is required. Laughingly they stated: "We don't stop the game every three minutes to talk to the referee. His decision is usually accepted without any comment."

Seasons in "the dark continent" are just the opposite of those in this part of the world, so the boys left one winter in Australia only to walk into another in Canada. Snow isn't very common in their country, and in Sydney 40 degrees above zero is considered a frigid temperature. At Christmas time the mercury hovers around the 100 degree mark. Asked about differences between the Australian and the New Zealander, they replied that the people of both places are very much the same.

Slang Makes Headway

American slang is creeping into the speech of the boys, but they, too, have their "slanguage." If you're told you're "fair dinkum" you're really "plenty O.K." A slang sentence of theirs might be very much like this: "Starve the lizards, that picture was really on the nose." Translated into American slang it merely means: "Gosh, that movie really stunk." Many more expressions slipped out during the conversation such as "bloke" (guy), "lollies" (candy), and "swagie" (tramp). A standing Aussie joke is that they intend to cross a kangaroo with a grizzly bear and get a fur coat with pockets.

Australian food isn't much different from American food. However, one dish that is characteristically Australian and one that is the favorite of all service men is "steak and eggs." Another custom which is typically Australian is to have a "bit of tea." As a rule, according to the cadets, Australians have tea five times a day. It is a common practice to take time off work to have tea. What

University Band Assists Community Chest Drive

The University band, directed by Clarence Bell, assistant professor of music, performed at a breakfast at the Florence Hotel and a dinner at the Country Club Wednesday, Nov. 27.

These functions were meetings in connection with the Community Chest Drive which is progressing all over the United States. Its purpose is to raise money for war relief. At the dinner the representatives discussed the results of the day's drive.

The University band is composed of 40 members this year.

a "coke" is to an American, a cup of tea is to an Australian.

Their Girls Not Career-Bound

As the conversation drifted into a more serious vein many interesting facts about Australia were brought out. Usually their high school system is not co-educational. Instead of the customary four years of study they are submitted to five years and usually a choice of 20 or more subjects is offered. They stated that Australian girls aren't as career-bound as American girls. Right now, however, Australian women and girls are taking over a great many men's jobs and many more are joining the branches of women's service divisions. They declared that many more women are in service in their country than there are in this country. Working on anti-aircraft batteries, operating search lights, driving trucks, and carrying mail are only a few of men's jobs now being done by women.

Comparing Australia's industries before and after war started they said that a switch had been made from the producing of primary (farm) products to the manufacturing of munitions, optical instruments, and machine tools. Before the war they imported all their machine tools. In regard to post-war plans they felt that Australia should stay under British rule.

Their final comments were that they like Montana very much and that they want to come back as soon as possible.

Library Shows British Books

The library has devoted a section to British Book Week, which has been designated by the American Library Association as October 24-30. Posters, pamphlets and both fiction and non-fiction books are displayed at the far end of the reading room.

British Book Week is vital because it is "a matter of importance to bring the American and English publics together in a friendliness and unity that will overcome the handicap of national differences," stated Miss Kathleen Campbell, librarian, in an address over radio station KGVO, Oct. 27.

Winston Churchill's "Blood, Sweat and Tears," Mary Ellen Chase's "This England," Jan Struther's "Mrs. Miniver," Arnold Bennett's "The Old Wives' Tales" and Margaret Kennedy's "Where Stands a Winged Sentry" are a few of the books in the library that will help Americans know and better understand the British people.

shifted rocks to form the date of their graduation.irate sophomores put an end to their fun. The frosh, under the not too gentle urgings of the upperclass, hurried back up the hill to right the wrong.

It was the fall of 1939 that the M suffered its greatest indignity. The Bobcat-Grizzly game was coming up. Bobcat strong men, thinking to pull a fast one, moved stealthily up the hill to shift the rocks to form a large B. Their joy was short lived. Grizzly men noticed the change about 3 o'clock and marched up the hill to shift the symbol back to its original form.

This year's addition to Montana lore will be tomorrow's trek of the fair sex. The feminine Grizzly now guards the home front to preserve Montana's traditions.
