UM PROF. CO-AUTHORS
NEW ARMY ADVICE BOOK

A University of Montana professor, James Cox, has co-authored a timely book entitled "Draftee's Confidential Guide."

Cox, an assistant professor of chemistry and education, wrote the book with Alan Levy and Barnard Krisher. The three men were drafted and met during their military service.

Subtitled "How to Get Along in the Army," the book is an expanded version of an earlier edition published in 1957.

Written with a tongue-in-cheek style, the book explores, examines, expounds upon and occasionally laments the various ins and outs of military service. The book at all times aims to give helpful, practical advice on how to make the best of the time spent in the Army.

Included are a current summary of the draft regulations, selective Service classifications and means of meeting military obligations. Tips for obtaining favorable Classification and Assignment and training suggestions are also offered. There is a special section on the Selective Service College Qualification Test with sample questions, and a glossary of official and unofficial terminology.

Cox says "This book was not written by the Army or for the Army. It was written for the man about to enter military service, willingly or unwillingly."
