MISSOULA--

An intensive five-day workshop applying a "systems" perspective to behavior will be offered at the Plains High School, June 11-15 from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. Dr. Charles Horejsi, professor of social work at the University of Montana, will teach the three-credit UM extension course.

Systems concepts can be used to help understand the individual, small groups, the work environment, the community, and the dynamic interaction between the systems. The course will relate this perspective to participants' various roles in the social environment.

This course would be useful to teachers, administrators and other community members interested in the analysis of behavior. There are no prerequisites for the course.

Fees are $75, credit or noncredit. For registration information, phone Jean Morrison, 826-3600 in Plains or the University of Montana Center for Continuing Education, 243-2900, in Missoula, Registration deadline is June 4.
