SLIDE SHOW

The way it comes to me, an occupant
of a black carriage, too ironic to pine over,
the sea's green shrug, the fan of little hands
patting ponies, the cloak of sun worn on clay.
I welcome ghost claws ferrying a volatile sleep -- the toss that's wild like an exclamation. To yearn fully in a moan. To greet him by overturning tables.
Every scribbled sentence is an eventual peace.
Smile and go in.
