MISSOULA--

Summer is normally a time for vacations and lounging in the Montana sun, but is means something different to University of Montana football coach Larry Donovan and his staff.

Donovan and his assistants Rick Johnson, Bob Lowry, Ken Flajole, Lynn Rosenbach, Mike Van Diest and Joe Glenn have been traveling around the state and Washington during the summer months, already working on recruiting for next season.

Early in June they hosted the first-ever Grizzly Boy's Football Camp, with 102 athletes participating. They have also traveled around Montana working in clinics in various high schools.

Rosenbach and Johnson were involved in a football clinic in California in which 750 athletes attended. Later this month Rosenbach and Donovan will teach in an all-star clinic in Spokane.

"It's been a busy summer for us, but a fruitful one," Donovan said. "We've met a lot of people in Montana and are really excited about the enthusiasm they have for the University. They have been very receptive to me and the rest of the staff. It makes us feel very good about the Grizzly program."

In early August Donovan will continue his travels around Montana, this time going to Great Falls to speak at the Montana High School Coach's Association annual clinic. It will be held Aug. 6.

On Sept. 3 a women's clinic, "How to watch football and enjoy it more" will be held by Donovan and his staff. More information can be obtained by calling 243-5331.

Donovan said he was grateful to more than 100 Century Club families who helped paint the seats at Dornblaser stadium last July 3.
