ASRM TO DISCUSS FUTURE RANGE PLANNING IN SEATTLE

The twentieth anniversary meeting of the American Society of Range Management will meet in Seattle, from Feb. 13-17, with "The Next Twenty Years in Range Management" as its theme.

Professor Melvin S. Morris, University of Montana forestry professor, is the outgoing president of the society. He said a total of 93 papers dealing with range science, technology, resource demand and management will be presented at the meeting.

Morris stated panels consisting of representatives from government, the public and education will discuss problems dealing with future demands for water, recreation, wildlife and livestock production.

Society members from Canada, the United States and Mexico are expected to attend the meeting.

The new officers for the ASRM are Dr. Wayne Cook, president from Utah State University in Logan; Dr. E. J. Dysterhuis, president-elect of Texas A and M University in College Station; and John Clouston, executive secretary of Portland, Ore.

The new directors are Dr. Don Cornelius, Agricultural Research Service of Berkeley, Calif.; Alex Johnston, Canada Agricultural Research Branch, Lethbridge, Alta.; Dr. Martin H. Gonzalez, Ranch Experimental La Campana, Chihuahua, Mexico; Dr. Charles E. Poulton, Oregon State University, Corvallis; Sherman Ewing, SN Ranch, Claresholm, Alta.; and Laurence E. Riordan, Colorado Fish and Game, Denver.
