We Didn't Believe

Through the ceiling, where the holes were widest,
we watched the night sky

as it passed, placid and cold.

To each other, we burned like smooth horses.

Though blankets were not enough, listening pleased the violence of our ears.

Fixed to the carpet, smelled the dark grass of the fields, bodies still warm with weather.

The sky a soundless face.

We've heard our mouths will taste like fire in heaven.
