INTRODUCTION TO NEW TESTAMENT STUDIES

This course will examine (1) the history of early Christianity, (2) the literature produced by the early church, and (3) the methodology used by modern biblical scholarship in studying ancient texts. As we work our way through the New Testament text, we will employ the tools of literary and historical criticism. Emphasis will be on studying what the text "meant" in its original context and not on what it may "mean" for particular religious traditions today. Given the pluralistic context of a public university, this course will approach the New Testament from a non-sectarian, non-denominational perspective.

Course Requirements

Class members will be graded on the basis of two one-hour examinations (October 3 and November 7), the final examination (Monday, December 16), and class participation. Regular class attendance is expected, even though the instructor will not routinely take roll. Students, if they desire, may take this course on a P/NP basis. If so, the last day to change from a letter grade to P/NP, or vice versa, is October 14. An examination average of 70 or above is required to pass this course under the P/NP option.

Students who may miss an examination due to illness or a family emergency should consult with the instructor about making up the exam and/or writing a term paper in place of the missed exam. Also, students should consult with the instructor regarding whether or not taking an incomplete in the course is possible. (Note: the university policy on incompletes is on page 21 of the current UM catalogue.)

Required Texts

Achtmeier, Paul J.; Green, Joel B.; and Thompson, Marianne Meye. Introducing the New Testament: Its Literature and Theology. Grand Rapids: Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., 2001.

The Bible: Old and New Testaments with Apocrypha. Any modern translation (but not a paraphrase) is acceptable. Preferred translations include the NRSV, RSV, NEB, NIV or NAB. The bookstore has a supply of the Oxford Annotated Bible with the Apocrypha (which uses the NRSV translation), if you need to purchase a bible for this course.
