UPWARD BOUND AT UM
ATTRACTS 70 THIS SUMMER

MISSOULA--

Upward Bound, a seven-week program in university living and education for bright, economically deprived high school students, began its fourth summer on the University of Montana campus Sunday (July 6). The session at UM will end August 22.

Thirty-six young men and 34 young women are participating in the program. They come from Western Montana, with the exception of seven students from the Wind River Reservation, Lander, Wyo.

They are admitted into the program on the advisement of their high school counselors that they have college potential and that they are economically underprivileged.

A national program under the U.S. Office of Education, Upward Bound has motivation as its goal--the motivation of the students to strive to achieve in high school and to seek education after graduation. The program also aims to encourage the high schools to teach, the colleges to admit, and the communities to respond. The program began in 1965.

UM

The program includes a bridge program for high school graduates and a program for sophomores and juniors that offers a variety of elective courses.

The bridge program offers 10 hours of college credit with the students taking courses in biology, algebra and English composition.

Juniors and sophomores take required courses in social studies--world history or contemporary government, reading and discussion of literature, art--drawing or ceramics, and physical education. Electives include typing, business practices, journalism and communications, French, photography, chemistry, race and ethnic relations and mathematics.
