Course Description

What does it mean to be good? To be human? To govern well? Chinese thinkers have been debating these questions for millennia. To understand their answers is essential to understanding China and East Asia past and present.

This course is a survey of Chinese social and political thought rooted in a close reading of sources in translation. We will trace the evolution of Chinese thought from the flowering of philosophy in the Axial Age, through periods of contestation and innovations, into the modern rejection of tradition in favor of Western ideologies, to the contemporary appropriation of ancient ideas. Our primary concerns will be politics, society, and law.

In the first half of the semester, we will build a foundational understanding of Chinese thought through the mid-nineteenth century. The second half will be spent considering that legacy and its interactions with foreign ideas in the modern era, including the emergence of distinctly Chinese forms of Marxism, liberalism, etc. We will pay close attention to how concepts changed over time and how thinkers put them to different purposes in their varying historical contexts. A major lesson will be that Chinese thought was and is far from monolithic, even within seemingly autocratic and intellectually repressed states.

Each time we meet, we will consider a new question in the historical context in which it arose in China. Class time will be divided between lectures on current scholarship and collaborative exercises in which we will engage closely with our primary texts. Be sure to read your primary sources very closely, with a pen or pencil in hand so that you can take notes in the margins. When we discuss a text or idea in class, I will expect you to make direct reference to the sources to support what you say.

Besides the concrete knowledge outlined above, this course aims to develop students' skills in critical reading and written argument. One of the critical features of philosophical discourse is that each participant is engaged in some form of contestation with others. Chinese thought is not simply a mystical experience to be "felt," nor is it an inferior cousin of "Western" thought – rather, it is a discussion that has been going on for over two millennia. Your job is to read the primary texts, which have been translated expertly and consistently into English, very closely. Read to see who each speaker's opponents are, and read to test their arguments against your own. Then, in the papers and response essays, talk back. I will read your writing just as critically, and we will keep our discussion going on the page and in the classroom. The goal is not just to learn Chinese thought, but to sharpen your perception and self-expression in the process.

By the end of this course, you should be able to:

- 甲. Define the arguments at the heart of each era of Chinese social and political thought and their major participants
- 乙. Understand and critically analyze the central concepts of Chinese social and political discourse and how they have been redefined over time
- 丙. Engage in spoken or written discourse about Chinese thought

Required Readings

All members of the class must purchase two books and bring them to class for every meeting:

P. J. Ivanhoe and Bryan van Norden, eds., Readings in Classical Chinese Philosophy (Indianapolis: Hackett Publishing Company, 2005).

Justin Tiwald and Bryan van Norden, eds., Readings in Later Chinese Philosophy: Han to the 20th Century (Indianapolis: Hackett Publishing Company, 2014).

Further readings will be distributed as packets in PDF format through the course site. You are required to print these packets out, read them thoroughly before class, and bring them to class.

Note: The three books listed below are accessible and provide useful background. These and others are noted in the schedule as "Grad." Graduate students in the course are required to do these readings.

Peter Bol, Neo-Confucianism in History, (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 2008).
Wejen Chang, In Search of the Way: Legal Philosophy of the Classic Chinese Thinkers, (Edinburgh: University of Edinburgh Press, 2016).

NB: This book is exceptionally expensive. You may borrow my copy or use the one that the library is meant to put on reserve.

Timothy Cheek, The Intellectual in Modern Chinese History, (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2015).

Your Feedback

You will have three chances to send me anonymous feedback regarding the course so far. Surveys will be posted on the course site. I will take your feedback into consideration when planning and adjusting the course schedule and our class meetings. (See the schedule above.)

Office Hours

I am always open to meeting with you during office hours. It helps to send me an email to schedule 15 or 30 minutes of time beforehand. If you have a scheduling conflict and cannot make it to office hours, we can find another time to meet.

Evaluation

1. Weekly Responses (25 pts)

Every week, you must submit a short response to the primary source readings. These are to be posted in the Response Forum on the Moodle site. Submit your response on either Tuesday or Thursday by 10:00 AM. It must be on the readings for that day, but it may reflect on the other readings for the week, as well.

A good response consists of an observation and a question. Each week, you will have discussion questions to guide your reading. It may help you to answer one of these in your response.

You should not summarize the reading in your response. Instead, reflect on an idea in the reading that you found confusing, compelling, or disagreeable. You should ask questions of the reading and argue with or against it. This will help prepare both you and me to participate in class discussion.

2. Midterm Paper (20 pts)

The midterm paper (1,500-2,000 words) will consist of an original argument concerning Chinese thought as we will study it through Week 7. Your argument must draw mainly on our primary source materials. You may use outside readings with my prior approval.

In order to write this paper, begin with a question, for example, “How did the early Legalists influence later Confucian ideas of government?” or “What would Xunzi have thought of statecraft scholars’ ideas of education?” Submit this question as your topic.

The paper itself should present an answer either to this question or to another question that comes up in the course of your research. One week before the paper is due, you will submit a draft to me. I will promptly return the draft to you with comments, with the expectation that you will revise the paper further.

Write concisely.

3. Final Paper (30 pts)

The final paper (2,000-2,500 words) will consist of an original argument concerning Chinese thought as we will study it in Weeks 8-14, but it will also build on what we study in the first half of the semester. This paper must also be based on our readings. You may use outside readings with my prior approval.

Here are some ideas for final papers: 1. Look at another Chinese thinker we have not considered. 2. Track the evolution of a concept, such as “benevolence,” through the history of Chinese thought.

Here are some examples of productive questions: 1. “When modern thinkers and politicians have appropriated ‘Confucius,’ have they accurately represented his ideas?” 2. “How can we best understand the idea of ‘law’ in modern Chinese thought?”

4. Active Participation (1 pt per meeting = 25 pts)

Active participation means adding your voice to a productive discussion.

My criteria for good participation are these: excellent participation means listening to your classmates and engaging with what they say – either through substantive disagreement or by significantly building on it. To be able to do so, you must come to class prepared, both in the sense of having done your homework and in the sense of being ready to discuss. We will frequently break into small groups, in which your participation is even more important. An excellent class participant does the work.

Perhaps most importantly, excellent participation means asking questions. Good questions may certainly begin with, “I’m so confused. What does it mean when it says...” The first step to wisdom is acknowledging what you don't know.

It will benefit you to print out copies of your readings, take notes by hand on these physical copies, and then bring them to class.

5. Option for extra credit: Ambitious undergraduates may choose to read the texts labeled Grad on the syllabus. Preparing these and attending and actively participating in the graduate discussion section will yield an additional 3 pts on each occasion.

For graduate students taking the course, there are four additional requirements:

1. Complete secondary readings marked “Grad” in the course schedule. This is an additional reading load of approximately 50 pages/meeting.
2. Write a midterm paper of 2,500-3,000 words. This must draw both on primary and secondary sources.
3. Write a final paper of 3,000-3,500 words. This must draw both on primary and secondary sources.
4. Attend a weekly graduate discussion section at a time and place to be arranged with the instructor.

Policy on Late Work

For every 24 hours an assignment is late, its grade will fall by one letter grade, ex. A to A-, B+ to B, C- to D+, etc.

Policy on Academic Honesty and Plagiarism

All students must practice academic honesty. Academic misconduct is subject to an academic penalty by the course instructor and/or a disciplinary sanction by the University. All students need to be familiar with the Student Conduct Code:

(http://www.umd.edu/vpsa/policies/student_conduct.php).

Do not plagiarize. Plagiarism is defined as “Representing another person's words, ideas, data, or materials as one's own.” When I ask you a question, it may be tempting to look up the answer online, copy it, and alter a few words to make it sound like your own thoughts. If you do so, you will betray your own education. I am invested in you as a student – I want you to learn this material, and to become a better thinker. Because plagiarism harms your development, I will discourage it: in the first instance of plagiarism, the assignment in question will receive a grade of 0 with no chance for revision. In the second instance, we will pursue the matter through established university disciplinary procedures.

Statement on Accommodations

The University of Montana assures equal access to instruction through collaboration between students with disabilities, instructors, and Disability Services for Students. If you think you may have a disability adversely affecting your academic performance, and you have not already registered with Disability Services, please contact Disability Services in Lommasson Center 154 or at (406) 243-2243. I will work with you and Disability Services to provide and appropriate modification.
