DEAN BOLLE NAMED
TO DISSERTATION COMMITTEE

MISSOULA, Mont.---

Dr. Arnold W. Bolle, dean of the University of Montana School of Forestry, has been named to the Committee on Support of Social and Behavioral Science Dissertation Research in Outdoor Recreation Research.

This committee, within the Division of Behavioral Sciences of the National Research Council, was established by the National Academy of Sciences at the request of the Department of the Interior.

The committee will administer a new program of grants intended to encourage both theoretical and applied research that will contribute to fundamental knowledge and broaden understanding of critical problems of outdoor recreation.

According to Dr. Bolle, the program seeks to stimulate and improve the quality of research and to provide significant information for use in public decision making.
