4 PROGRAMS SET
AT U OF MONTANA
WITH SCIENTIST

MISSOULA---

Four programs featuring a Utah scientist and dealing with the dangers of radioactive fallout are scheduled tomorrow through Friday at the University of Montana.

Speaker will be Dr. Charles W. Mays, an associate research professor in the Radiobiology Division at the University of Utah, Salt Lake City.

Topics and the locations of the various discussions follow.

"Social Responsibility of Scientists," 4:10 p.m. Wednesday, room 114, UM Health Science Building; "Biological Effects of Nuclear Explosions," noon Thursday, room 202, Chemistry-Pharmacy Building; "Radiation Induced Cancer," 2:10 p.m. Thursday, room 202, Psychology Building; "Utah and the Nevada Atomic Test Site," noon Friday, room 307, Natural Science Building.

The latter three sessions are open to the public. Dr. Meyer Chessin, a UM botany professor, is program coordinator.

The American Institute of Biological Sciences is sponsoring the lectures under a grant from the Atomic Energy Commission.
