ORAL INTERPRETATION
PROGRAM MONDAY AT UM

MISSOULA--

Five University of Montana students will be featured in an oral interpretation program Monday (March 16) at UM.

The program, which is open to the public without charge, begins at 7 p.m. in the University Masquer Theater and is under the direction of David M. Fisher, an assistant professor of speech communication at UM.

Students participating in the program and the works they will interpret include:

Mary Jane Blakely, Missoula, "To Sleeping Beauty" by L. Markes and "The Farmer and the Lord" by J. Wilson; Anne Margaret Sullivan, Butte, "A Separate Peace" by John Knowles; Kathy Ann Eckroth, Deer Lodge, "The Innocent" by Graham Greene; George Durant, Missoula, "The Bucket Rider" by Franz Kafka, and Pamela Griffin, Great Falls, "The Grapes of Wrath" by John Steinbeck.

The group of five students will combine their speech communication talents in doing "Four Preludes on Playthings of the Wind" by Carl Sandburg and "The Mad Tea Party" from "Alice in Wonderland" by Lewis Carroll.

Concerning the program, Fisher said, "The students will interpret the works as they think they ought to be interpreted, in terms of what they know about the authors and each writer's background."

The program is sponsored by the UM Department of Speech Communication.
