Anthropology Department to study skeleton

A human skeleton found Saturday in Rattlesnake Canyon is 50 to 200 years old, Charline Smith, assistant professor of anthropology, said yesterday.

Smith emphasized that this was only a preliminary age estimate which could change after a more thorough examination of the bones.

She also said the age and sex of skeleton would determined with some certainty

The human bones were found Saturday by two boys exploring an old roadbed near the end of Duncan Drive.

Western Montana Represen-tative Richard Shoup was termed "mentally ill" yesterday Patrick Flaherty, senior in philosphy, at a guestion and answer session in the University Center Mall at noon.

Referring to Shoup's support of President Nixon's mining of Haiphong harbor, the student called the policy "insane" and called the policy "ins said Shoup was "sick."

The accusations followed vocal exchanges between students and the congressman concerning his stands on Vietnam, the Supersonic Transport (SST), and the environment.

Shoup said he supported Nixon's recent actions in Viet-nam as "the only alternative."

The matter of Shoup's vote on the SST was brought up several times. Shoup claimed he did not support the SST bill. He said three votes were taken and he voted against the measure twice. The other time he said he was

Sen. Hart's wife refuses to pay taxes

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) The wife of Sen. Philip Hart, D-Mich., says she will make no more payments on her income tax as a protest against the war in Vietnam, Booth Newspapers said yesterday.

The eight Michigan newspapers reported that Jane Hart wrote the Internal Revenue Service on May 10 saying she is refusing to make any more payments.

In writing the IRS, Mrs. Hart said she is "ready to accept any sanctions that apply.'

She said she put the money in a special bank account instead of paying it to the IRS.

Hart said he and his wife are in "total agreement" on the war, he said he opposes non-payment of taxes as a means of protest.

PANTS JAB

One of the chief sources of opposition to the proposed constitution is the highway users lobby-a powerful statewide lobby composed of groups who build and commercially use Montana highways.

These groups oppose the proposed constitution because it would allow a three-fifths majority of the legislature to dip into Highway Department funds and use the money for things besides roads.

Under present law this money can be used only for highways. The fund has currently more than $38 million in it collected from gasoline and vehicle registration taxes. The money sits idle.

This lobby group, obviously paranoid about its well-being, says the legislature will beat the members out of many lucrative highway construction contracts by spending the money elsewhere.

That could be, but just the opposite might happen.

By allowing the state legislature a crack at these funds voters might in effect be gaining better highways.

Because rather than see the legislature use its money the Highway Department would probably spend it on highways. If these funds were committed to actual highway construction contracts, the legislature would not be able to touch them.

By approval of the constitution-with this anti-diversion amendment in it—the Highway Department would be forced to spend its money or lose it.

It appears, then, the highway users lobby rationale is as bad as our highways. If it successfully opposes the constitution with this argument:

 The members of that group will continue to wait for contracts as the Montana Highway Department sees fit to let them.

Highways will continue to be as bad as they are now.

Montanans will lose many valuable reforms as a result of a negligible, obstructionist argument.

Approval of this amendment might just be the jab in the pants the Montana State Highway Department needs to quit being so tight-fisted about its funds.

UTRIDER by garry wills

REDUCING THE ELECTORATE TO A CLAQUE

President Nixon concluded his harbor-mining speech with a separate paragraph for "each of the major parties involved" in that aggressive action—the North Vietnamese, the South Vietnamese, other nations, the Soviet Union, and "finally, the American people."

The message to the American people was that they have to support their government, in order to impress foreign governments. He sounded like George Wallace, asking us to "send them a message"—send Hanoi and Russia the message that America will not be defeated. Nixon was, in effect, picking a fight with the world, and saying to us: "If you're not on my side, you're on theirs."

That is how the American public is controlled and manipulated—a process revealed in the Pentagon Papers. The idea is that the government is something different from the people; yet the people will always choose their government, if it is made a matter of choosing between it and a foreign government. We must stifle any misgivings about what our government is doing, not consider its responsibility to us, because that might strengthen other governments. So easily is patriotism reduced to acquiescence in rash policies, disagreement with which amounts almost to treason. We are made the tools of the President, something he uses to impress others: To quote his own speech: "It is you most of all that the world will be watching." Every citizen is thus conscripted into a state of almost military duty and blind obedience.

This conscription tactic is not accidental. The logic of it is spelled at the property of the Pontage Property written.

out in one of the private memoranda of the Pentagon Papers, written by an assistant secretary of defense as the 1964 election was approaching; "The relevant audiences of U.S. actions are the Communitst (who must feel strong pressures), the South Vietnamese (whose morale must be buyoed), our allies (who must trust us as 'underwriters'), and the U.S. public (which must support our risk-taking with U.S. lives and prestige)."

There it is spelled out—the same group of "audiences" that Nixon enumerated in his speech, from each of which he tried to get essenenumerated in his speech, from each of which he tried to get essentially that response described in the memorandum. But Nixon does not speak so frankly in his speech as the memorandum did. There we were simply another ''audience'' for the government's performance. Nixon put it more politely, calling us ''participants.'' The point is that we are for the government, an outside force, to be use, or neutralized, or pressured into support—or, lacking that, into submission. The government acts, and we—the audience—applaud. If we do not applaud, other parts of the audience might not be sufficiently impressed by the performance. We applaud for the world's sake, not on the merits of the act, each of us looking over his shoulder to see if we have started a contagion of applause, as we were ordered to.

The government is supposed to be our servant; instead we are its hired claque, bullied into shouting "bravo" as the act gets more ridiculous. No wonder our war managers have such contempt for 'public Opinion.

Wills, the author of Nixon Agonistes, has written for Esquire, New York, Playboy and National Review.

Editor: I am one of those 39 bandwagoners who objected to your editorial about Wallacae (Montana Kaimin, May 17). Now I find myself in the absurd position of writing a rebuttal to your rebuttal to our rebuttal of your editorial. Obviously, our original letter was unclear, and even more obviously, you did not get the point.

I apologize for saying your editorial represented the worst kind of journalistic practices. Mr reasons for that apology are:
I have since thought of much worse practices.
I have realized that I was opposed to the editorial on personal rather than professional ground. I thought your editorial was an ugly comment based on no reasoned argument, such as why Wallace should be dead or how that would improve a bad situation.

Your appropriate our letter makes me see that we are both "first-aid."

Your answer to our letter makes me see that we are both "first-aid students" and therefore allowed to make some mistakes.

and to make as ass of yourself and that your behavior need not reflect on me or on the journalism school. What you say, however, does reflect on you. In your reply to our letter, Conrad, you "accused" six of us of working for an outfit that pumps out drivel, one of us (which one, Conrad?) of being a thief, and all of us of being "morally bastard brothers and sisters" for allowing Bill Vaughn to sign the letter. That you had to reply in that fashion speaks for itself. Perhaps, you, too, need to read more of the writings of those journalists (H. L. Mencken, Joseph Pulitzer and Deal A. L. Stone) to whom you referred in your rebuttal. Surely, they would have used, if not more ethical, then more judicious arguments against us judicious, arguments against us. No, Conrad, I do not "advocate the silencing of carefully thought, logical opinion." I would, in fact, enjoy reading editorials like that.

Editorial 'masterpiece'

Editor: Your editorial, To One's 'Peers' of May 19, was an absolute masterpiece of drivel and 'University-oriented trash.' It was a shinly-disquised effort to not only vindicate yourself and your own 'wounded professeioal integrity,' but to smear the reputations and qualifications of those students foolish enough to openly criticize the editorial ethics of such an experienced journalist as yourself.

You say you can't believe they actually advocate the censorship of an idea they don't agree with. I can't believe it either. However, I do believe that you deliberately misinterpreted their letter in order to justify your attack on cing an editorial statement? A glance over the signatures reveals the names of Rich Bangs, Bill Blake and Don Larson. Three members of your staff.

Were you trying to put out the fires of insurrection by discrediting them and thereby voiding their opinions?

I wonder too about your statement concerning the journalism students' advocating the silencing of your "carefully thought, logical opinion." Was your Friday editorial another of those philosophically sound opinions, or was it written in a fit of self-righteous outrage?

You attack your "censors" because some "are engaged in advertising or

You attack your 'censors' occause some are engaged in advertising of public relations work or hope for the same after graduation." Are you trying to say they are all dupes of Madison Avenue, thus making them guility by association? What about yourself? You're in journalism, where do you plan on fitting in? There are not too many businesses with no "moral or ethical justice"? Your hypocrisy is showing.

"One of you is an admitted thief." Which one? Would you rather leave it as it appeared, so thay you could intimate that each of those 39 individuals is a potential felon? You have plucked a single, irrelevant incident out of police files to imply that anyone who doesn't agree with you is obviously a social deviate.

It is you, not they, who seeks to censor ideas not in keeping with personal philosophies or opinions. You accuse them of intellectual foppery yet have the pomposity to draw a not-too-subtle parallel between yourself and Mencken, Pulitzer and Stone. An ego like yours belongs in politics.

"That you consider yourself capable of judging the worthiness of anothers' opinions relates an insane delusion of competence, rationality, and self-centered, non-professional pride.

Editor: Everybody's up in arms about Reverend Richard's actions, but, I would submit that his actions are not too different from those that would take effect if anyone else were in office. I would submit that the vulgarity found in the world today can be almost unerringly traced to the obsolete form of government known as the nation-state. This is one world with one race, and actions which deny that are most obscene.

Walter Hill, assistant professor of chemistry at the University of Montana, is the recipient of a five-year Research Career Development Award by the National Institute of Health (NIH). He will conduct research on ribosomes.

Hill's research is centered around a study of the physical structure of ribosomes, which are particles that make up cells. Hill said his research will aid in trying to understand how these particles help manufacture proteins in the cell.

"Since many antibiotics function on the ribosome, it is felt that an understanding of the structure and function of the ribosome will be especially important in the effort being made to control disease," Hill said.

Blacks must work for equality, Black Week speaker says

Stressing that "Black Pride" does not simply mean natural hair styles, Lou Smith, Los Angeles, told a crowd of about 50 last Friday night in UC 360F that blacks in America have never reached equality because they ask the white society for equality instead of working for it.

Smith, president of Shiandana Toys and "Operation Bootstrap" in Los Angeles, teaches at the University of California at Irvine. He said the real meaning of Black Pride and Black Power was

He said the real meaning of Black Pride and Black Power was "self love." Without self esteem, he said, it is impossible to "love others and work toward change."

"The Watts riots were the first time that blacks began to love their air," he said.

Smith added that the Watts riots of 1965 was the beginning of the change from "Negroes" to "blacks" and a pride in being black. Smith emphasized that blacks must now work for unity among themselves.

If blacks want equality, Smith said, they must educate themselves and then return to share the benefits of education with their own people. He said many blacks who do leave the ghetto never return; instead they try to become part of the white society by conforming and accepting high-paying jobs. Smith called these blacks "super spooks."

Smith cited "Operation Bootstrap" and Shiandana Toys as examples of blacks working among themselves. "Operation Bootstrap" is an organization in Los Angeles aiding low-income groups. Shiandana Toys manufactures black dolls.

The problem seems to be whether to evaluate the program in terms of its potential or in terms of its success to date.

The 48-credit course is of-ficially described as an experimental, interdisciplinary study of the environment and man's place in it. A committee set up by the administration to evaluate the course reported that the course's greatest virtue seemed to be its use as a tool to help students who are having trouble adjusting to society.

On a day-to-day basis the program continues slowly and quietly. Last week, for example, one group of 16 students atteneded a regular Round River group meeting held every Mon-day, then left Tuesday for the Lubrecht Forest, where the students learned to identify four species of trees and made a population estimate of the number of each kind of tree in their area.

Wednesday the group drove order to visit Garnet, a ghost town near the experimental forest.

Thursday the group hiked to a possible building site for structures to house Round River students when visiting the forest. They inspected the site and observed biological phenomenon.

On Friday the group returned to Missoula. It is through just this sort of activity that Leitch feels the group has been taught first-hand the biological, botanical, sociological and political aspects of almost every geological area of western Montana.

The program can be divided into three areas-basic theory, social aspect and academic aspect.

The vaguest of the three is the theory. Even Leitch, who helped design the course, is not entirely

He is quite certain, though, how not to go about achieving his ends, and that is to teach in classrooms. He told the Montana Kaimin that everything, except, possibly, "splitting atoms," can be taught best out-of-doors.

The course is taken for 16 credits a quarter, Leitch says, because in order to achieve his goals a great deal of time is needed. This time element seems to be the virtue and the fault of the program. The time the entire group spent together at the beginning of the school year no doubt accounts for the strong group identification that is cited as the program's major virtue. However, the amount of time needed to accomplish the not overly impressive amount of overly impressive amount of academic learning in the course was far in excess of that spent in sure of what he is trying to do and traditional learning situations.

The last six days of the final week of each quarter will be scheduled in two hour segments, one for each course. The two hour segments should be considered as class meetings, to be treated by the instructor as he thinks educationally appropriate.
The final (6 day week is not, therefore, a final examination week, but a week of class meetings. Instructors are expected to meet their assignments to fulfill the remaining requirements of the course, help to meet the educational needs of their students or otherwise conduct their class meetings in that last week of the quarter in ways that serve the best academic interests of their students.

UM thinclads pull upset, win first Big Sky crown

Harley Lewis's thinclads started what could be the beginning of a dynasty as they ended years of frustration of second best finishes by easily outdistancing second place Idaho State, 147 to 124, at the Big Sky finals last weekend in Boise, Idaho.

The key to Montana's success story, as it has been all season long, was the Grizzlies balance in all events, and the performances of their outstanding freshmen.

Probably the most instrumental in UM's upset was freshman Ric Brown who took advantage of some strong competition to clip one-tenth of a second off the Big Sky 440 record with a 47.3 performance. Brown's run was four-tenth's of a second from qualifying for the NCAA finals.

Brown also bolstered the Grizzly cause by placing second in the 220, an event he rarely runs, and anchoring the UM mile relay team to a second place finish.

Another freshman who picked up a first was javelin thrower Craig Stiles. Stiles managed to toss the spear 242-9 against a strong wind. This performance was eight feet further than his nearest competitor. Upper classmen compiled the other two UM firsts. Junior steeplechaser George Cook avenged last years defeat to Northern Arizona's Richard Sliney with a record breaking time of 8:58.9. The only other Grizzly first came in the triple jump. Sophomore Glenn Chaffey atoned himself for failure to place in the long jump by leaping 47-101/2 Another strong event for the Grizzlies was the 440 high hurdles. Sophomore Casey Walker placed second, and junior Joe Epler took third. Both with rather unspectacular times of 14.7. Walker had previously turned in a 14.2. Some of the biggest UM surprises of the meet came in the weight division as two Grizzlies recorded lifetime bests to secure second Steve Ralston whipped the discus 157-2 feet, and Jim Vanmansart fired the shot 51-ll.

Mike Hale, Grizzly high jumper, leaped 6-7 to give another first, but was denied the win because Ramey of Montana State jumped the same heighth with less misses. Due to the improved quality of competition in the distance events a stellar performance by freshman Doug Darko went almost unnoticed. Darko turned in lifetime bests and record-breaking times in both the steeplechase and the three mile only to finish third in each event. The first three places in both events bettered old Big Sky

Vandals take crown in All-Sports race

BOISE (AP)—A first place finish in tennis in the final weekend of competition gave the University of Idaho the all-sports trophy for the Big Sky Conference.

Commissioner John Roning announced Monday the 10 points won by the Vandals' first place in the tennis gave them the all-sports award by a four-point margin over Weber State.

Idaho finished with 62 points to 58 for Weber State.

Weber won 25 points in the final weekend by taking firsts in baseball and golf, but couldn't close the gap and catch up with Idaho.

Idaho's big victory of the season was the football championship, which counted 25 points toward the award. The Vandals finished second in golf, skiing and swimming.

Head Start center gets renewed grant

The Head Start center at the University of Montana has received a $43,440 grant from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Jan Roberts, a regional officer for Head Start and project director of the grant, said the grant had been renewed by HEW.

She said the money will be used to finance salaries, office and travel expenses, and Head Start publications.

Roberts said Head Start offices are often situated on college campuses so Head Start people can work with the college to effect institutional changes in courses concerned with the education of children.
